CLAUSEN ARRESTED IN PICTURE SUITS

Dealer Is Lodged in Ludlow Street Jail After Trying in Vain to Get Bail.

DENIES ALL THE CHARGES

He Declares Mr. Evans Employed Him to Have Paintings Retouched—Alleged Masters Were Fakes.

William Clausen, the picture dealer, was arrested yesterday afternoon at his shop in East Thirty-fifth Street, charged with "deceit and fraudulent misrepresentation" in connection with the three pictures which were sold by him to William T. Evans and later presented by that collector to the Corcoran Gallery. Mr. Clausen was taken to the Sheriff's office by Deputy Sheriff Walgering and the two waited until 5 o'clock in the hope that he could find a bondsman. As no bondsman was forthcoming, the picture dealer was taken by Assistant Deputy Sheriff Terry to the Ludlow Street Jail, and was still there at a late hour last night. This is the climax of the "spurious picture" case which has been the subject of discussion for artists and collectors in New York for the last month.

A civil order of arrest was issued by Supreme Court Justice Davis on the application of Mr. Evans. There are two actions, one brought for the recovery of $2,850, and the other for $2,500, which are the respective values of the two alleged fraudulent Homer Martins which Mr. Evans has caused to be removed from the Corcoran Gallery in Washington. A third action on account of the alleged fraudulent George Inness, which was also removed, is soon to follow. Bail in both cases was fixed at $2,500.

Basis for the Suits.

In the complaint Mr. Evans says that he purchased two pictures from Clausen which the picture dealer represented to be original pictures by Homer D. Martin, an American artist who has been dead for some years. On information and belief Mr. Evans says that the two pictures known as "Near Newport" and "Old Mill Near St. Cloud," that he purchased from the defendant, are not original pictures painted by Homer D. Martin, but that the said pictures "were painted in imitation of the work of the said Homer D. Martin."

The complaint goes on to say that Mr. Evans had heard several criticisms of the pictures and that the middle of last April he ordered them to be taken from their frames and examined. "Upon taking pictures from their frames," continues the affidavit, "I found that the back of each one of them was stained or daubed with paint, which is not usually done by artists, and which, in my opinion, was done, with respect to said two pictures, either to give the canvases the appearance of age or to hide stencil marks on the backs of the canvases which, if left visable, would have given the names of the manufacturers of the canvases and assisted in tracing their origin."

Annexed to the papers are three affidavits, two from men who formerly worked for Mr. Clausen and another from an artist who examined several pictures that Mr. Clausen had sold.

An affidavit by Otto J. Karsh, who was formerly employed by the picture dealer, says:

> I first saw the two paintings above mentioned in or about 1903 in Clausen's place of business. Said pictures came into the store of the defendant at different times and each of them was purchased by the plaintiff.
>
> For a period of several years bare canvases were frequently mounted upon stretchers in the place of business of the said William Clausen and prepared for painting, and when thus prepared were sent away from said Clausen's place of business, and later canvases, which in my opinion were the same which had been sent away, were returned, having painted upon them pictures signed with the names of celebrated American artists, principally George Inness, Alexander H. Wyant, or Homer D. Martin, all of whom had then been dead for several years, and pictures painted by any of whom commanded a ready sale at high prices. The pictures to which I refer were painted in imitation of the work of the artist whose name they bore. Said pictures were offered for sale and sold from time to time by said Clausen as original works of the artists whose name they bore, said Clausen well knowing they were spurious.

The affidavit of Charles Graesel, who was also formerly employed by Clausen, declares:

> In the years from 1900 to 1904 many paintings were brought into Clausen's place of business and were signed with the names of Martin, Wyant, and Inness, well-known American artists, but who had been dead for some years.
>
> I frequently stretched canvases on stretchers. They went away from the defendant's place of business bare and had not been painted upon, and they came back with pictures on them freshly painted, bearing the names of the above-named artists, although all of them (the artists) had long been dead. Sometimes two or three freshly painted pictures came in within a week bearing the names of one or the other of these artists.

The affidavit says that Clausen often told the deponent to save all the old stretchers and to put them in a certain small room.

The affidavit continues:

> I often saw him [Clausen] in the room in question staining the wooden stretchers to give them the appearance of age. On several occasions said defendant ordered that the sweepings of the floor be saved, and he used them on canvases which had recently been painted by rubbing such sweepings on the back of the canvases to take off their new appearance and to give them the appearance of age.
>
> I remember the picture called "Near Newport." I fitted it into its frame when it came into defendant Clausen's establishment, which was in or about the year 1903. It was then a freshly painted picture. It was only a few weeks, or at most only a few months old, at that time.

Graesel's affidavit in reference to the picture known as "Old Mill Near St. Cloud" is the same.

Called It a Bunko Game.

Frederick W. Kost, who says that he is an artist, makes an affidavit in which he swears that Clausen told him that the whole picture business "was a bunko game."

Mr. Kost's affidavit is to the effect that he was called to the home of the late Lyman G. Bloomingdale to examine a picture which Mr. Bloomingdale had purchased from Mr. Clausen, and which the owner did not think was a genuine "Homer Martin." He said he called on Mr. Clausen, and asked him about the picture, and the defendant told him that it was all right. He called on Mr. Bloomingdale, examined the picture in question, and pronounced it an imitation. Mr. Bloomingdale sent the picture back to the dealer, and the artist says that a day or two later he called on Mr. Clausen and asked him, "Where is that 'Homer Martin' that Mr. Bloomingdale had?"

"Mr. Clausen replied," the affidavit continues, "that it was up stairs, and I said, tell me, Clausen, who painted on that picture, Dawson? He replied, 'No, Dawson don't paint on no more "Homer Martins" for me.'"

The artist says in his affidavit that he asked Mr. Clausen why he tried to sell the picture to Mr. Bloomingdale.

Clausen's reply was, according to the affidavit, "Fred, don't you know that

BLACKBALLS AN ATTACHE.

German Rejected by Paris Club—Kaiser Said to be Greatly Concerned.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 15.—Herr Horstmann, an attaché of the German Embassy in this city, was blackballed this week by the Cercle de l'Union, the most exclusive club in Paris. In consequence of this action Prince Radolin, the German Ambassador, has been placed in a position where he may have to resign his membership in the club. His example would be followed by other members of the embassy. This is the first instance in which a foreign diplomatist has been blackballed since the club was founded.

I hear from an excellent source that the German Emperor has taken the matter keenly to heart and that it may be his wish that the Ambassador shall resign.

In explaining the incident, a member of the Governing Committee of the club said:

"By an unfortunate coincidence, at the very moment when the Kaiser was proclaiming German rule in Alsace, three members of the German Embassy came up for election in the club. They were Prince Courland, Herr Franck Lerr, and Herr Horstmann. The first got in, it is said, by a misadventure. The second was elected, but the third was de trop. No one had anything against Herr Horstmann personally, but, after all, we are Frenchmen. Besides, the German attachés are noted for their disregard of the usages of the best French clubs."

The incident is peculiarly embarrassing to Prince Radolin, owing to his relationship by marriage to the Duc de Rohan, the club's President, and to other leading members.

GATES-MADDEN TIPS CEASE.

Horseman "Lay Down" on Him, Mr. Gates Says—"Bunko," Says Madden.

John W. Gates and his former friend, John E. Madden, the horseman, have not been exchanging tips lately. Stories of trouble between them were circulated yesterday at the track. The differences between the men are said to have arisen over a disputed matter of $7,472, and it was said that Mr. Gates intended to sue the horseman.

When the story was repeated to Mr. Gates at his office at 111 Broadway yesterday and he was asked what the money trouble was about he said: "I bought some stocks for him, and he lay down on me." He denied that any racetrack transaction was involved and declined to go into details. His lawyers, Byrne & Cutcheon, at 24 Broad Street, also refused to discuss the possibility of a suit. Mr. Gates has been out of the stock brokerage business for over a year.

Mr. Madden, at the Belmont Park race course, was outspoken in his repudiation of the debt referred to by Mr. Gates. He declared that he did not owe Mr. Gates a cent, though he said Mr. Gates had advised him to buy certain stocks and had volunteered to find a man who had some of the securities for sale. The information concerning the stock, he explained, was Mr. Gates's return to Mr. Madden for tips on the races. Mr. Madden announced that he would fight the suit through the last court in the State before he would pay the sum claimed by Mr. Gates, declaring that he had not authorized any deal of the kind alleged by Mr. Gates.

"If Gates can make me pay on the claim he has put forward I will believe that bunco steering is a good business," Mr. Madden concluded.

CLOSED BANK TO OPEN.

New Interests Are to Take Hold of the Mechanics' and Traders'.

Assents to the deferred-payment plan under which it is proposed to reopen the Mechanics and Traders' Bank have reached 87 per cent. of the total deposits, and it is expected that the number will be swelled to at least 90 per cent. within a few days. As soon as a sufficient number of depositors have come in under the plan application will be made to Supt. Clarke Williams for permission to resume.

The committee, of which Paul Grout is Chairman, has arranged a plan of reorganization under which new interests will be brought into the bank, and practically all of the old Directors and officers will retire. President Sullivan announced some time ago his intention of resigning as soon as the bank was again on its feet. Leo Schlesinger, who had been President of the Mechanics and Traders' before the Thomas interests bought control, has been named as a possibility for the Presidency.

Under the reopening plan it is proposed to pay 10 per cent. of the deposits when the bank resumes business, and an amount every four months thereafter, increasing by 5 per cent. each time until at the end of sixteen months the final 30 per cent. is to be paid.

The work of rehabilitating the bank has been aided by a number of the large depositors, who will be represented in the new Directorate.

4 YALE STUDENTS IN COURT.

Accused of Making Football Rush at a Fire, Throwing Down Policeman.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 15.—Four Yale undergraduates stood up in the police court to-day on the charge of breach of the peace as the outcome of a conflict of a squad of policemen with a crowd which was witnessing a fire one evening two weeks ago, and their trial lasted all day and then went over until next Tuesday.

The defendants were Graham Foster, the 'Varsity wrestler; William A. Goebel, the football guard; Benjamin Wallis, and C. H. Gilbert. All pleaded not guilty.

Counsel for the four students made a stubborn defense, as it has been asserted since the arrest that the police were entirely mistaken in identification of the persons in the crowd who resisted their efforts to clear the street in order to put up fire lines. A guardian had to be named for Goebel, who is under age, and his attorney was so named. Goebel, who is one o fthe largest men in the university, towered over his guardian.

According to the officers, some students made a football rush at the fire, during which one officer was thrown down.

GREAT AUTO RACE PLANNED FOR AUGUST

Racing Men and Makers Enter Into Transcontinental Contest with Enthusiasm.

MEETING NAMES COMMITTEE

Other Newspapers Pledge Support and Prizes for the Contestants—Another Meeting Soon.

The double trans-continental endurance contest proposed by THE TIMES received the heartiest indorsement of the meeting of automobile manufacturers and their representatives, held at THE TIMES office last night, and preliminary steps were taken to carry the plan into effect.

The contest will be held some time in the Summer, probably starting from Times Square about Aug. 15. The contest will be in the hands of a committee of the best known automobilists in the country, and will have the support of the leaders identified with automobiling, both as a sport and as an industry. The plan and scope of the race will be formulated by a committee consisting of Jefferson Demont Thompson, A. R. Pardington, and Robert Lee Morrell, who will draw up the conditions for the contest and submit them to a second meeting of manufacturers to be held at THE TIMES office within the next fortnight.

Nearly a score of prominent manufacturers were represented at the meeting, and others unable to be present expressed by letter their entire sympathy with the plan. The expression of opinion was unanimous that the contest would prove the most interesting and beneficial ever held in the history of the sport.

The meeting was called for the purpose of ascertaining the sentiment of automobile manufacturers toward the project and to form some idea of the character of the contest desired. It was generally agreed that the event should be limited to stock cars of a given maximum of power, that the cars should be handled by a single crew, that the actual replacements on the road should determine the durability of the machines in the contest, and that speed and endurance should count equally in determining the winner.

Support and Trophies Pledged.

The course of the race will be from New York to San Francisco and back, going West over one route and returning over another and touching on the outward and homeward journeys the leading centres of population en route. The support of The Chicago Tribune and other leading newspapers in the principal cities through which the cars would pass was pledged to the race, and an offer of suitable trophies was made for the leading cars. In addition to the cup offered by THE TIMES to the car making the best showing in the contest, the Italian paper, Il Progresso, offered a trophy for the second car.

There were present at the meeting Jefferson De Mont Thompson, Chairman of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association and of the Vanderbilt Cup Commission; A. R. Pardington of the Racing Board Vanderbilt Cup Commission and Chairman of the Contest Committee of the Long Island Automobile Club; Harry Clinton of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, Alfred Reeves of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association, André Massanet of the Panhard and Levassor Company, Harry A. Lozier of the Lozier Company, C. G. Wyckoff of Wyckoff, Church & Partridge, representing the Stearns car; Sidney D. Bowman of the Apperson and Clement Bayard Companies, E. R. Hollander of the Fiat Company, J. W. Delamater of the Hotchkiss and Pennsylvania Companies, W. E. Shearman of the White Company, F. S. Stevenson of the Studebaker Company, Walter E. Sykes of the Zust Company, H. H. Knepper of the Frayer-Miller Company, Fred Wagner and A. L. Ruland, representing the Geerless Company.

Chaiman Thompson spoke enthusiastically of the project and said he believed it would be of the greatest importance to automobiling. He apprpoved heartily of the idea of a stock-car race and believed the best test possible for automobiles was over the roads of the United States such as a transcontinental contest afforded. His views were warmly seconded by A. R. Pardington, who declared his belief that the contest would enlist the interest of every automobilist in the country. Both men expressed themselves as ready to aid the project in any way possible.

Stock Car Race the Best.

Harry Lozier was keen for a race. He declared that a stock car race over American roads was the best sort of a contest for American cars, and would do more for the sport and the industry than anything else that could be devised. He said he was ready to enter a race of the kind, and believed it could be made a conclusive test. Andre Massanet declared himself in favor of a race for stock cars without change. He said that he would like to see a contest in which cars were taken out of the stock of a manufacturer without any change whatever and sent out on the road to try what they could do under conditions exactly similar to those facing the ordinary purchaser of automobiles.

Sidney Bowman was in favor of the contest on the same lines, but thought some minor changes in the cars, such as larger gasoline and oil tanks, should be permitted. C. G. Wyckoff expressed the belief that the contest could be made the most spectacular as well as the most interesting and conclusive of any ever held in the history of the sport. The same sentiments were expressed by the other representatives present, all agreeing on the general plan for a stock race under conditions to be formulated by a representative technical committee.

It was then that the proposition was made to leave the plan and scope of the race to the committee of three composed of Jeferson De Mont Thompson, Robert Lee Morrell, and A. R. Pardington. This committee was instructed to draft the rules along the lines which they considered suitable and present them to the subsequent meeting. They were also authorized to nominate a technical committee, which should have the decision of the various technical questions which might arise and of a general committee to take charge of conduct the race. These nominations and conditions will be passed upon at the next meeting.

This work will be done in the shortest time possible, and the next meeting will be held at THE TIMES office in the latter part of next week or early the following week. In the course of a fortnight definite announcement of all conditions will be made and entries called for. Assurances have already been received of the entry of eight cars, and the probabilities point to a larger number when the formal conditions shall be announced.

ITALIAN CAR WITHDRAWS.

Race to Paris Left to the American and German Autos.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 15.—The committee in charge of the New York to Paris race received from Milan to-day official announcement from the Societa Motori Zust of the withdrawal of its car from the race at Vladivostok. The Marquis De Dion has also formally withdrawn his car, leaving the American Thomas car and the German Protos car to complete the journey from Vladivostok to Paris alone.

The German car is forced by the regulation of the race committee to allow the Thomas car thirty days in the crossing of Asia and Europe, on account of the action of the German crew in taking a train in America, from Pocatello, in Idaho, to Seattle, prior to sailing for Vladivostok.

The French and Italian cars have reached Vladivostok, and the German and American cars are expected there in a few days. It is understood that the Zust factory at Milan has recalled Giulio Sirtori, who drove the Italian car across the United States, to assist in preparing another car at Milan to enter the contemplated race across the United States this Summer.

PROF. WYCKOFF DIES.

Noted Sociologist Expires at His Home in Princeton.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 15.—Walter Augustus Wyckoff, Assistant Professor of Political Economy in Princeton University, and probably the man best informed on tramp life of any one in this country, died at his home here to-night after several weeks' illness.

Prof. Wyckoff was born in Mainpuri, India, on April 12, 1865, the son of a missionary, the Rev. Benjamin Du Bois Wyckoff. He was graduated from Princeton in 1888, and spent two more years in graduate study of sociology. Then he passed another year in study and travel abroad. Returning to this country in the Summer of 1891 he began to investigate the conditions under which the workers of America labor.

Starting in Connecticut with no money in his pockets and equipped only with a strong conviction and a thirst for knowledge, he worked his way through nearly every State in the Union, mingling with all classes of men, and engaging in every conceivable means of employment. The years 1893 and 1894 he spent as a private tutor and traveled twice around the world.

On his return he was appointed Social Science Fellow at Princeton, was made Lecturer on Sociology the next year, and in 1898 was promoted to the Assistant Professorship of the department. In 1897 and 1898 he published his experiences as a day laborer in two volumes under the title, "The Workers—the East" and "The Workers—the West."

Prof. Wyckoff was a member of the American Economic Association, the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the Century and University Clubs of this city, and the Ivy Club of Princeton.

PARCEL CARRIER SCALPS GIRL.

Tears Out the Hair of a Cashier in a Williamsburg Dry Goods Store.

As scream after scream rang through the dry goods store of H. A. Baker & Co., 1,720 Broadway, Williamsburg, at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, there was a panic among the attendants and the patrons of the place. Women fled toward the doors.

The few who ran in the direction of the screams found Kate Gorham, the young cashier of the store, lying in a heap in her booth. The girl's head had been scalped almost bare by a flying wire carriage in which goods are sent along to the wrapping room on overhead wires.

One or two girls who had seen the accident said that Miss Gorham stood up to speak to a friend just as the carriage came into the booth. As such contrivances are arranged, the carriage was traveling at high speed.

It struck the girl in the forehead and her hair caught in the wire mesh of the carriage, which stripped it from her head. Miss Gorham was carried into a dressing room, where Dr. Halpern from Bushwick Hospital attended her. Then he took her there. Her condition was said last night to be critical.

NO HOPE FOR THE RICKMERS.

Wrecking Tug Leaves Big Sailing Ship to Her Fate on Jones's Beach.

Special to The New York Times.

FREEPORT, L. I., May 15.—Hope has been abandoned of saving the hull of the big German steel ship, the Peter Rickmers, which ran ashore on Jones's Beach two weeks ago and from which her crew of thirty men and about sixty shoreworkers from this place barely escaped with their lives when a second storm a week ago drove the ship higher on the sands. The heavy seas have been pounding over the wreck ever since that time, and there is now little worth saving about her.

Capt. Bachman, who was the last man to leave his ship and who, since then has stayed with the life savers of Jones's Inlet hoping against hope that his ship might be saved, left here yesterday for New York. The Merritt-Chapman wrecking tug, I. J. Merritt, sailed away from Jones's Beach this morning.

There is still some of the oil with which the ship was loaded in the water-filled hulk, and this will probably be brought ashore. The vessel will pound herself to pieces after a time, and become one of the number of fine ships which have stranded on this shore, never to leave it again.

Two Killed in Oklahoma Wreck.

MUSKOGEE, Okla., May 15.—A southbound passenger train on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad to-day collided head-on, three miles north of Muskogee, with a northbound freight train. Two trainmen were killed and fifteen passengers slightly injured. The wreck was due to a mistake in orders by the freight train crew.

$100,000 IN PICTURES DESTROYED BY MONET

Famous French Impressionist Artist Thinks His Work of Past Three Years Unworthy.

SLASHES THEM WITH KNIFE

Unique Studies of Water Effects—Paris Art World, Which Praised the Paintings, Astonished.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 15.—Pictures with a market value of $100,000 and representing three years of constant labor, were destroyed yesterday by Claude Monet, the French impressionist master, because he had come to the conviction that they were unsatisfactory.

The pictures destroyed had already been seen by the friends of the artist and by leading critics, who had pronounced them to be among the best works that M. Monet had ever accomplished. They were to be the feature of an exhibition of this master's work which was announced to open next week in the galleries of Durand-Ruel. The exhibition, which already had been advertised in the French papers, had aroused unusual interest among artists and amateurs, as it had been a long time since any new works by M. Monet had been placed on public exhibition.

At the last moment, while he was reviewing the pictures and superintending the framing of them, the artist became discouraged. He declared that none of his new works was worthy to pass on to posterity. With a knife and paint brush he destroyed them all, despite the protests of those who witnessed his act.

Pictures by M. Monet are currently selling at from $6,000 to $10,000 each. The artist's action has aroused consternation in the art world. It has also raised the ethical question as to the artist's right thus to destroy his handiwork.

The pictures were unique, in that they constituted a series of remarkable studies reflecting water under different light effects.

M. Durand-Ruel, the senior member of the firm which in recent years has acted as agents of M. Monet, told the correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES this afternoon that while he was disappointed to be unable to hold the exhibition as advertised, M. Monet's action showed him to be an artist, not a mere manufacturer.

"Such action is not unprecedented," he said. "Degas, for example, destroyed three-fourths of his production. It is a pity, perhaps, that some other painters do not do the same."

Claude Monet, who is now 68 years old, and recognized as leader of the impressionist school, began his work by being strongly drawn to the work of Corot, and certain mannerisms, which disappeared with increasing years, indicated the influence of the Barbizon school. He now admits no master, and for the most part draws his inspiration directly from nature, apparently caring little for subject, detail, or composition. His aim is chiefly to reproduce the effects of light and air, to portray the fleeting aspect of things. To Monet the effects of complementary contrasts and color mixtures are so distinctive and certain that to those not similarly trained his representation of them appears affected and exaggerated.

Among his earlier paintings are "The Mouth of the Seine at Honfleur," (1865;) "Fontainebleau Forest," (1866,) and "Vessels Leaving Havre," (1868,) and many landscapes produced before 1875. His later works include "Cap Martin, near Mentone," and "Studies of Rouen and Its Cathedral."

BOY BRANDED WITH A POKER.

Superintendent of Newark Negro Children's Home Accused of Cruelty.

Inmates of the Home Trainers' Christian Association, a "refuge" for colored boys in Newark, N. J., testified in a police court yesterday regarding the alleged practices of Wesley H. Whittington, the Superintendent, who was being examined on charges of cruelty. One boy told Judge Howell that Whittington had seared him across the forehead with a red hot poker, showing the scar to bear out his testimony, which was corroborated by other children.

Other testimony yesterday was to the effect that Whittington frequently beat children in the institution with the butt end of a horsewhip and with a strap and buckle, and had used a stove lifter to beat one child into submission. That the food was inadequate and improper was charged. One child, Zachariah Jones, testified that he was sent every night to the Newark Centre Market to gather chicken legs, fish heads, and cast off vegetables from which food for the children was made.

Judge Howell, in adjourning the case for further hearing, said that it did not appear to him to be a police court affair, but was something that should be placed before the Grand Jury without delay.

LOANS ON INSURANCE POLICIES

Equitable Drops the Rate to 5 Per Cent. and Makes This Retroactive.

In the stringent money period last Winter the Equitable Life Assurance Society advanced its rate of interest on policy loans, in cases where the policy contained no loan stipulation, to 6 per cent. It has now reduced the rate to 5 per cent. and made the reduction retroactive.

The difference of 1 per cent. will be returned at once to all wha have paid it. More than half of the Equitable's policy loans were made voluntarily on policies which contained no loan agreement.

KING BUYS FURNITURE HERE.

Edward VII. Places a $35,000 Order with an Evansville (Ind.) Firm.

Special to The New York Times.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., May 15.—William A. Koch, President of the Evansville Furniture Manufacturers' Association, said to-day that he has received information from St. Louis that King Edward of England has, through an agent at St. Louis, closed a deal for furniture manufactured in this city, to cost $35,000.

The furniture is to be used in one of the King's palaces, and the styles were selected from pieces of furniture on exhibition at the furniture exchange at St. Louis. The furniture will be shipped from this city to New Orleans by boat, and from that port will go direct to Liverpool.

President Koch said to-day that King Edward will be made an honorary member of the local furniture men's organization.

MRS. FITZHUGH LEE IN NEED.

Vain Appeal Made to the House for a Pension for Her.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—An ineffective appeal was made in the House to-day by Messrs. Richardson and Jones for a pension of $50 a month to Ellen Bernard Lee, widow of General Fitzhugh Lee. Mr. Richardson told the House that Mrs. Lee's sole support was out of the pay of her son, Capt. Fitzhugh Lee of the army.

Mr. Loudenslager said there were thousands of other widows of soldiers having the same claim on the Government who had no one to appeal for them. He was not opposed to an annuity to Mrs. Lee, but objected to a pension, as it would establish a precedent which would involve an expenditure of more than $200,000,000 a year.

RECORD OF AN EARTHQUAKE.

Washington Observers Think It Was in the Vicinity of Central America.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—An earthquake that lasted an hour, and of considerable intensity was recorded on the Weather Bureau seismographs here early to-day. The origin, according to a statement of Chief Willis L. Moore of the bureau, is approximately 3,200 miles from Washington. Central America or the Pacific Ocean west of Central America fall within this distance.

The quake began at 3:39:52 o'clock this morning, 75th meridian time, and the strongest motion, which set in at 3:55, lasted for about ten minutes. The first preliminary tremors, which were very sharply defined, occupied six minutes and forty seconds.

OLD VANDERBILT HOTEL SOLD.

The Bellonia, Foundation of the Vanderbilt Fortune, Brings $15.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., May 15.—The Bellonia Hotel, in this city, in which Commodore Vanderbilt laid the foundation of the Vanderbilt fortune, was sold at auction to-day for $15. There are $15.66 back taxes due on the property, and the sale was subject to a dower right which, if estimated at the above figures, would make the total cost of the property $45.99.

When Commodore Vanderbilt ran his boat line from this city to New York seventy-five years ago his wife looked after the hotel. The Bellonia had many vicissitudes after the Commodore dropped boating and went to railroading. In late years the hotel has been used as a boarding house for foreigners. The purchaser of the Bellonia and eight other tracts was Thomas H. Hagerty, a local lawyer, who stated that he made the purchase for himself.

FOUR HURT IN CAR SMASH.

Sixth Avenue Trolley Hits a Horse Car at Duane Street.

Four persons were slightly hurt shortly before 9 o'clock last night when a northbound Sixth Avenue surface car crashed into a Madison Street crosstown horse car at Duane Street and West Broadway. The injured were:

Sam Silverglathe, 21 Leroy Street; Charles Gensberg, 367 Vernon Avenue, Brooklyn; H. Levitt, 27 East 110th Street; Harry Van Gilden, 62 Union Avenue, Rutherford, N. J.

They were passengers in the crosstown car. All were able to go to their homes and refused medical aid.

The crosstown car attempted to cross in front of the other after the latter had started. The driver of the horsecar blames the motorman for the collision.

All the windows in the crosstown car were shattered, and the passengers in both cars were shaken up considerably. No arrests were made.

BOMB EXPLODED IN CALCUTTA

Intended to Wreck a Street Car, but It Injures Only Natives.

CALCUTTA, May 15.—A bomb which had been placed on the rail of a street car line here was exploded to-day by the wheel of a cart passing over it. Four natives were injured.

It was evidently the intention of the perpetrators of the outrage to wreck a street car containing white persons, as notices in Bengali had been circulated warning natives not to ride in first-class cars. Apparently the bomb was charged with picric acid and not dynamite.

This being the fifth attempt within five months to blow up street cars with bombs, much uneasiness has resulted.

SCHOONER LOST; CREW SAVED

Life Guards Rescue Five Off the William McGee at Sea Isle City.

ATLANTIC CITY, May 15.—The three-masted schooner William McGee, Capt. Persel, from West Point, Va., for New York with a cargo of pine boards, was sighted off Sea Isle City about 5 o'clock this morning flying her flag union down as a signal of distress.

There was a heavy northeast storm along the coast last night, and the sea was so rough this morning that the Sea Isle City life savers were for a time unable to launch their boats to go to the rescue. Later when the sea had subsided the life savers put out and rescued the Captain and crew of four men. The schooner afterward went to pieces at Camden Inlet.

The William McGee was built in Maryland in 1865. Her hailing port was New York. The schooner became waterlogged three days ago and was in comparative safety until yesterday's storm broke. The vessel then began leaking badly, and the crew was set to work at the pumps. Hundreds of dwellers along the beach witnessed the rescue.

GOVERNORS TO MEET BY THEMSELVES

Their Next Conference Will Probably Be in the Middle West.

TO CONSIDER MANY LAWS

Roosevelt Says State Rights or National Sovereignty Do Not Concern Him, Only Saving People's Rights.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—President Roosevelt dominated his White House conference of Governors to its end, and had his way with the resolutions it adopted, but within ten minutes after it had come to a final adjournment another conference of Governors was going on in the East Room of the house, aimed at perpetuating the idea he had suggested, with the President and the White House totally eliminated.

Hereafter the meetings will be real conferences of Governors, freed from the domination of the National Administration, and they will consider not merely subjects suggested by the occupant of the White House, whoever he happens to be, but whatever questions arise in any of the States that are of general interest.

The Roosevelt idea of a conference obtained the hearty and enthusiastic indorsement of all the Governors, but that is as far as they go with him. They approve the effort for conservation of the Nation's natural resources, but they want also to take into general consideration a host of other subjects which were barred from discussion at this meeting, and they want to consider them in their own way.

So they selected Govs. Swanson of Virginia and Willson of Kentucky to name a committee of five or seven Governors who shall arrange a time and place for a meeting next year and prepare the programme. The expectation is that the meeting will be held in some city of the Middle West—St. Louis or Chicago—and that it will be in session for ten days or two weeks.

Getting Away from Roosevelt.

Gov. Glenn of North Carolina, the man who last year was engaged in a hot contest for the supremacy of State against Federal railroad laws, and who yesterday made a strenuous appeal for Federal assistance in his special forest reserve scheme, was one of the leading spirits in breaking away from Roosevelt domination. He was ably seconded by Gov. Folk of Missouri. Gov. Glenn presided at the meeting of organization, with Gov. Willson as Vice Chairman.

There had been a good deal of talk among the Governors in the last day or two about organizing a "House of Governors" to have annual conferences. Govs. Willson, Sheldon of Nebraska, and Folk had acted as a committee on the crystallization of ideas, so that when the meeting was ready for action the situation had been pretty well shaped up.

Gov. Willson made a little speech, in which he gave the twenty-five or more Governors who were there a concrete illustration of what such an organization as was proposed might do. He said that one of the questions he would like to have a general expression of ideas on was that which he is about to face in his own State. He is preparing, he said, to send troops into one of the Kentucky counties for the suppression of night riders, who have been laying waste the tobacco fields.

"Now, when I do that," he went on, "they will indict me. The question is, shall I stand on my rights as Governor and not acknowledge the summons, or shall I go to the county and stand trial?"

The Governors did not commit themselves on the question, but it was the general opinion that if such a proposition were submitted at their next conference it would provoke a wide discussion, and the result would be bound to be helpful to all of them.

Show of Feeling.

At the last session of the President's conference, some show was made of a disposition on the part of the Governors to break away from his domination, but it was not carried very far. It was not intended to be anything more than a show of feeling, but it was enough to bring forth a ringing declaration from Mr. Roosevelt. There was a very full attendance when the President called the conference to order soon after 10 o'clock.

Immediately Gov. Blanchard of Louisiana, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, read his report. He explained that the committee had purposely refrained from making any specific recommendations for a permanent form of organization. The resolutions provided for future conferences to be called by the President. Gov. Glenn at once submitted an amendment providing that the President should call a conference at any time on the request of one-third of the Governors. That brought about a somewhat lively discussion, which was its purpose. Gov. Davidson of Wisconsin bluntly declared the general feeling by saying he believed it much better to have a Governor's organization entirely independent of the President.

Then Gov. Folk, who has been especially active in bringing about the independent organization, took the floor. He paid the usual compliment to the President. "But," he said, "the present occupant cannot always be President. Suppose that sometime there should be a man in that office who should want to use the power and prestige of a gathering of the Governors to coerce Congress. We all think that the 'big stick' once in a while is a mighty good thing, but we don't know what man hereafter may have that instrument in his hands, and I for one do not want to commit myself and the man who is to follow me as Governor of Missouri to something which might be used merely as an instrument to accomplish the will of the President."

Resolutions Adopted.

Then the President called for a vote on the resolutions, which were adopted unanimously. Before proceeding with the regular programme he made this short speech:

"One word of appreciation as to the high plane of thought and action on which the Governors have carried on this conference. I believe the conference has done good. I believe it will do very much good, and the reason is in the spirit in which you gentlemen have approached your task. You have set before yourselves simply the ideal of simple performance of duty to the people of the States and of the Nation, and I tink that you can go to your homes feeling that as a reward for the drain upon your time and for the trouble that you have taken you may have the feeling that you have worked and that you have worked efficiently for the furtherance of the public good, and I heartily thank you for what you have done."

The principal speech of the programme was by Mr. Bryan, who used an expression which brought out the President's emphatic declaration.

"There is no twilight zone between the Nation and the State," said Mr. Bryan, "in which exploiting interests can take refuge from both."

Gov. Comer of Alabama followed Mr. Bryan, and convulsed the conference by saying: "We are a little bit skittish about turning over our railroads to the President," and then tacking away from the subject as if he had inadvertently stepped on forbidden ground.

When Gov. Comer concluded the President took up the "twilight zone" expression of Bryan.

Roosevelt On State Rights.

"I want to say one word about the twilight land," he began, "the power between the Federal and State Government. My aim in the legislation I have advocated for the regulation of the great corporations has been to provide sound, effective, popular sovereignty for each corporation. What I am trying to find out—not negatively, not by decision that a State cannot act or Federal decision that the Nation cannot act—is where one or the other can act so that there shall always be some sovereign power on behalf of the people that they may hold over the big corporation, over the big individuals, too, that an accountability regarding their acts shall be had for the benefit of the people.

"In matters that relate only to the people within the State, of course, the State is to be sovereign, and it should have the power to act. If the matter is such that the State itself cannot act, then I wish on behalf of the State that the National Government should act."

That brought out another burst of applause. The President went on to explain in detail his position on the use of water for power, and concluded by saying: "Where this policy can be carried out best by the State it ought to be by the State. Where it can be best carried out by the Nation, then the Nation should enforce it. My concern is not in the academic discussion of either the principle of State rights or the principle of National sovereignty, but it is what will best conserve the needs of the people as a whole."

Conference Adjourned.

Then the President's conference adjourned and the Governors' conference of Governors began. Several things had handicapped the Governors in the sessions of the President's conference. To begin with, they did not know one another, and were a little slow to get acquainted. Then they all felt that, inasmuch as the President had called them together they were more or less bound to follow his lead in what they did. And they felt also a restraint of hospitality. Meeting in the White House, it seemed as if they were guests in the President's residence, and it would not do to oppose his desires. But just as soon as they got together on their own motion that hesitancy disappeared, and the result was the prompt initiation of their own movement for permanent organization and regular meetings hereafter.

"First in the list of subjects which the next conference will discuss is uniformity of extradition laws and procedure. They are interested also in efforts to obtain uniform marriage and divorce laws and a good many other subjects.

Declaration of Principles.

The Governors adopted a declaration of principles, in part as follows:

> We commend the wise forethought of the President in sounding the note of warning as to the waste and exhaustion of the natural resorces of the country and signify our high appreciation of his action in calling this conference to consider the same, and to seek remedies therefor through the co-operation of the Nation and States.
>
> We agree that this co-operation should find expression in suitable action by the Congress within the limits of and co-extensive with the National jurisdiction of the subject, and, complementary thereto by the Legislatures of the several States within the limits of and co-extensive with their jurisdiction.
>
> We declare the conviction that in the use of the natural resources States are interdependent and bound together by ties, by National benefits, responsibilities, and duties.
>
> We agree in the wisdom of future conferences between the President, members of Congress, and the Governors of the States regarding the conservation of our natural resources, with the view of continued co-operation and action on the lines suggested. And to this end we advise that from time to time, as in his judgment may seem wise, the President call the Governors of the States, members of Congress, and others, into conference.
>
> We agree that further action is advisable to ascertain the present condition of our natural resources and to promote the conservation of the same. And to that end we recommend the appointment by each State of a commission on the conservation of natural resources, to co-operate with each other and with any similar commission on behalf of the Federal Government.

To Continue Forest Policies.

> We urge the continuation and extension of forest policies adapted to secure the husbanding and renewal of our diminishing timber supply, the prevention of soil erosion, the protection of headwaters, and the maintenance of the purity and navigability of the streams. We recognize that the private ownership of forest lands entails responsibilities in the interests of all the people, and we favor the enactment of laws looking to the protection and replacement of privately owned forests.
>
> We recognize in our waters a most valuable asset of the people of the United States, and we recommend the enactment of laws looking to the conservation of water resources for irrigation, water supply, power, and navigation, to the end that navigable and course streams may be brought under complete control and fully utilized for every purpose. We specially urge on the Federal Congress the immediate adoption of a wise, active, and thorough waterway policy, providing for the prompt improvement of our streams and conservation of their water sheds required for the uses of commerce and the protection of the interests of our people.
>
> We recommend the enactment of laws looking to the prevention of waste in the mining and extraction of coal, oil, gas, and other minerals, with a view to their wise conservation for the use of the people, and to the protection of human life in the mines.
>
> Let us conserve the foundations of our prosperity.

An arrangement was made for the printing in the record of the prepared papers which were to have constituted the days' programme, none of which had been read. These were: "Conservation of Life and Health by Improved Water Supply," George M. Kohn, Professor of Hygiene, Georgetown University; "The Navigation Resources of American Waterways," by Emory R. Johnson, Professor of Transportation at the University of Pennsylvania; "The Conservation of Natural Resources," by H. A. Jastro, President of the American National Live Stock Association.

The following resolution, offered by William Jennings Bryan, was adopted by acclamation.

> Resolved, That this conference expresses its deep regret that ex-President Cleveland is prevented by sickness from participating in this historic meeting, and expresses its sincere wish for his speedy recovery.

It was at the President's suggestion that the resolution was adopted by acclamation.

CLEVELAND MUCH PLEASED.

Will Say Nothing Until Resolution Has Been Officially Received.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., May 15.—Ex-President Grover Cleveland, through Mrs. Cleveland, was advised of the adoption by the conference of Governors held at the White House to-day of a resolution moved by William J. Bryan expressing regret at Mr. Cleveland's inability to attend the conference, and hoping for his speedy recovery.

Mrs. Cleveland said that Mr. Cleveland was deeply appreciative of the action of the conference. Until the resolution is officially in hand nothing can be said as to a reply. It was said at the hotel where Mr. Cleveland is staying that Dr. Joseph D. Bryant, Mr. Cleveland's physician, is attending the Washington conference. He is expected here to-morrow. The continued improvement of Mr. Cleveland is reported.

ALLEN LEFT OVER $300,000.

His Will Leaves the Entire Estate to His Adopted Daughter, Mrs. Owens.

The will of The Allen, who died last Tuesday night, was read yesterday by Lawyer Emil E. Fuchs to the members of the dead man's family. By its terms Allen's entire estate goes to Mrs. Minnie T. Owens, his adopted daughter.

The value of the estate is between $300,000 and $400,000. The will is dated July 10, 1903, and is short and concise. Nothing is left to charity.

Mr. Fuchs will offer the will for probate in the Surrogate's office on Monday morning. This is expected to be the signal for a contest by the relatives left out of the property division. It is known that great discontent prevails among them over the terms of the will, and that this had much to do with the disturbance at the gambler's deathbed.

TO SHIFT STEEL CAR BARN.

City Railway to Re-erect Old Structure on Fourth Avenue Site.

The receivers of the New York City Railway Company have obtained from Building Supt. Murphy a permit for taking down the steel and corrugated iron car barn, 145 by 280 feet, which now stands at Lenox Avenue and 146th Street, and reconstructing it on the foundation of the stables of the Fourth Avenue surface line at Fourth Avenue, Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets. The building which formerly occupied the Fourth Avenue plot was taken down several weeks ago. It will cost $10,000 to put the big steel shed together again on the new site.

The Fourth Avenue block is the property upon which, it has been frequently reported and as frequently denied, the New Haven Railroad intends to build its own passenger terminal in the heart of the city.

JENKINS AGAIN INDICTED.

Trust Co. President Accused of Embezzling $100,000 for Brokerage Firm.

The Kings County Grand Jury handed down two new indictments yesterday against John G. Jenkins, Jr., ex-President of the Jenkins Trust Company, charging him with embezzling $100,000 of the funds of the company for the benefit of the stock brokerage firm of which he and his brother, Frank Jenkins, are the members.

It is charged that Jenkins withdrew $50,000 on Oct. 22, and a like sum on the following day. This money, it is alleged, if left in the vaults would have prevented the suspension of the company, which immediately followed.

POLICE VETERAN TO QUIT.

Lieut. Zeidler Discouraged by Transfer and Son's Death.

Feeling that he was unjustly treated in being transferred from the head of the Bureau of Electrical Service at Brooklyn Police Headquarters to Highbridge, Lieut. Julius Zeidler has asked to be retired on a pension. With the handing in of the resignation of the veteran policeman came the announcement of the death of his son, Julius Zeidler, Jr.

Lieut. Zeidler had been on the force more than twenty-five years, and for most of that time was stationed at Brooklyn Headquarters.

CAMPAIGN FOR PROSPERITY.

St. Louis Association Will Send Representatives on Tours.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 15.—The National Prosperity Association of St. Louis will send representatives to cities, towns, and county seats to spread the "Give us a rest and sunshine" movement, and induce the local business, labor, and agricultural organizations to unite for promoting the best interests of the country. Where no commercial or agricultural bodies are in existence the representatives of the association will endeavor to organize them.

The "Sunshine" delegations will leave St. Louis in special cars. Stops will be made at small places, as well as large. Mass meetings will be arranged in advance. Not only will emphasis be laid on the fact that the situation in the United States is fundamentally sound and that business will improve greatly and rapidiy with a restoration of confidence, but the association's representatives will indicate that a rest from hampering legislation is needed.

TEXAS IS FOR ROOSEVELT.

Taft Indorsed, but Delegation Free to Start a Stampede.

FORT WORTH, Texas, May 15.—The State Republican Convention, in session here to-day, passed resolutions in favor of Taft for the Presidency and indorsed the Administration of President Roosevelt. The delegates were not instructed to vote for Taft at the Chicago Convention, and it is declared by delegates that this action was taken to permit the Texas delegation to start a stampede for Roosevelt's nomination if the situation becomes favorable.

Texas will send two sets of Republican delegates to Chicago, the convention meeting here to-day being composed of the "regulars," while the "reorganized" division will meet in Waco later this month.

MEYER TO FIGHT BRYAN.

Ex-State Chairman Says This State, Jersey, and South Are Against Him.

Former Democratic State Chairman Cord Meyer said yesterday that he would go to the Democratic National Convention at Denver and do all in his power to prevent the nomination of William J. Bryan.

"Are you doing anything in this State at present to defeat him?" Mr. Meyer was asked.

"Oh, New York is all right," was the reply. "And so is New Jersey. And so is the South."

"Do you think the New York delegation is going to oppose Bryan at Denver?"

"There is no doubt of it. I have not seen Mr. Murphy recently, but I think he undoubtedly represented the sentiment in this great Democratic city when he stood out for an uninstructed delegation."

DEBS AND HANFORD CHOSEN.

Indiana and New York Candidates on the Socialist Ticket.

CHICAGO, May 15.—Eugene V. Debs of Indiana and Benjamin Hanford of New York are the candidates of the Socialist Party for President and Vice President. Their National Convention completed the ticket early this morning.

Anti-Taft Men from Virginia.

WINCHESTER, Va., May 15.—The contesting Republican Convention, held in this city to-day, elected delegates from the Seventh Congressional District. They are known to be anti-Taft.

Bryan Gets More Bay State Votes.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., May 15.—Resolutions instructing the delegates in favor of William J. Bryan as the Democratic nominee for President were adopted to-day at the Democratic Convention for the First District.

Colored Baptists Criticise Roosevelt.

BOSTON, May 15.—Resolutions severely criticising President Roosevelt for his attitude toward negro soldiers, commencing Senator J. B. Foraker of Ohio for his efforts in their behalf, and expressing regret that both political parties are "seeking to eliminate negro voters," were adopted to-day at the Baptist Convention of New England, colored.

SAVE NOTHING BY NEW ELECTRIC LAMPS

They Cost More to Install, More to Renew, and the Cost of Power Is Not Cut.

THEY DO GIVE MORE LIGHT

But Are More Fragile and Must Be Used Horizontally or Vertically—Of No Benefit in Households.

In an argument before Public Service Commissioner Maltbie on Wednesday for the purpose of showing why the cost of furnishing electric lights should not be reduced, officials of the electric light companies in Manhattan and Brooklyn declared that the companies were now prepared to furnish new equipment so greatly reducing the cost of light to the consumer that it would practically mean a difference of 50 per cent. This was to be accomplished, it was explained, through the use of the new tantalum and tungsten lamps.

The impression left among the users of electric lights was that they would reap a great benefit at no increased cost to themselves, and they were patting themselves on the back in the belief that the electric light bills would be cut in half.

As a matter of fact, householders have figured out that even by the use of the new lights there will be no saving at all if the usual number of lights are turned on. The only saving possible is the use of one of these lights where two lights have been used before.

No provision is made by the electric light companies for furnishing smaller than twenty candle power lamps, and as most private houses use sixteen, and even eight, candle power lamps, to replace them with the new lights will be simply a matter of giving more light than is needed, while the cost of the kilowatts burned would be practically the same for the twenty as for the sixteen candle power lamp.

It has been figured out, moreover, on the basis of using electric lights for a year in houses in which the electric equipment has been put in for 100 lamps that the first cost of installation will be $40, the tantalum lamps being 40 cents each, and that, taking 100 renewals during the year, the cost will be $25, the cost of each lamp under a renewal contract being 25 cents each. This is against a cost of $12 for installing 100 lamps of the 16 candle power kind now in general use, and a renewal cost of $4, or 4 cents each, on 100 lamps for a year. Figuring on the basis of a year, the difference in cost to install and renew the new lamps would be $49. It would take a big difference in the cost of power for the lights to offset this additional cost.

For those persons who already have electric lights installed in their houses and desire to replace the 16 candle power lamps now in use with 20 candle power tantalum, the smallest size made, it would cost 25 cents each, or $25 for a hundred lamps for the first installation. It would cost 25 cents each time one of the new tantalum lamps burned out.

According to a circular sent out by the New York Edison Company there are several decided drawbacks to the use of the new lamps. In the first place it will be necessary to use them in an upright or in a vertical position, and it will no longer be possible to hang the lamps haphazard, as is done with the lamps now in use. Again, the company has failed to provide any lamps of the small candle power, and to put one of the new lights in for the purpose of saving money would mean the burning of two or three times the light needed where an 8 or 16 candle power light is now in use and is sufficient.

The company gives the average life of the new lamps as 750 hours for the tantulum and 1,000 for the tungsten, but they immediately follow up this information with the statement that a warning to users is very necessary, and they give it in the following language:

> The filaments of these lamps are extremely fragile, and if not handled very carefully are liable to fracture. This is particularly true after the lamps are unpacked. The company, therefore, will be prepared to deliver any lamps ordered, place them in the sockets, and show them in actual service. When so delivered, or when delivered at its supply rooms, as the consumer may prefer, the customer's receipt will be taken, indicating that the lamps have been delivered in good condition, after which, obviously, the company cannot assume any responsibility for their care.

The cost of the tungsten lamp is much greater than the tantulum lamp, being upon renewals for 40 watts $1, 60 watts $1.25, and 100 watts $1.50. Where not entitled to free renewals the price is 25 cents higher for each lamp, according to the watts.

SHIPYARDS GETTING BUSY.

More Activity in Repair Work, Unions Say, Than Since Last Fall.

It was announced yesterday by the officers of unions in the trades employed in the shipyards in New York and vicinity that as far as the shipyards are concerned there is more activity than at any time since last Fall, when the shops began to lay off men, and that the improvement is increasing every week. The business done in the shipyards consists principally in repair work and overhauling transatlantic vessels between trips.

Business Agent F. M. McKay of the International Brotherhood of Boilermakers said:

"There is a steady improvement in the demand for men in the shipyards, and more men are employed there now than at any time within the last six months. Matters are coming around to their old way."

RESTORES 1,000 IDLE CARS.

Pennsylvania Railroad Expects a Rush of Business by June 1.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 15.—The Pennsylvania Railroad has issued orders which indicate that a good rush of business is expected not later than June 1. Orders have been sent out to lift back to the rails all cars which some time ago were set off the rails because there was not enough switch room for idle cars.

Work on getting the cars back was begun here at daybreak, and almost 1,000 cars on the lines west were derricked back on the rails before evening. Most of the cars which had been thus set off were in the best of repair, and so are now eligible for immediate use.

Woonsocket Rubber Co. on Full Time.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., May 15.—The plant of the Woonsocket Rubber Company at Millville, Mass., was in operation in full to-day for the first time in several weeks. More than 1,000 employes have been put on the payroll.

PAY FOR MISSING ARTICLES.

Mrs. Varnum Gets Verdict Against A. W. Speir, Her Tenant.

Archibald W. Speir of 114 West Seventy-second Street, who in 1904 leased Indestre, at Islip, L. I., the Summer home of Mrs. Robert Varnum, formerly Mrs. Charles D. Ingersoll, will have to pay to Mrs. Varnum $125 damages as a result of a verdict found by a jury, sitting before Judge Finelite, in Part II. of the City Court, on Thursday. The damages are for broken and missing china, glassware, and small pieces of furniture, which Mrs. Varnum asserted were not accounted for when an inventory of the household effects was made recently.

Mr. Speir, through his attorney, Edward V. Thornell, denied the charges and said that everything originally inventoried had been accounted for and returned in the same condition as when he took possession of the house under his lease.

Mrs. Varnum acquired Indestre many years ago, and until 1904 it was her Summer home. It is one of the show places of Islip, and is furnished throughout in luxurious fashion. In 1904 Mr. Speir saw the place and made an offer to lease it that Mrs. Varnum accepted, and he soon afterward took possession.

The house was leased furnished complete from cellar to garret, and, according to Mrs. Varnum, a complete inventory of all the contents, to the smallest of the kitchen utensils, was made. When the inventory papers were checked up recently a great many small pieces of china, glassware, &c., were found to be broken, and just as many were missing, as Mrs. Varnum charged. Very little of the furniture figured in the suit, and that which did was not of great value.

Mrs. Varnum asked for damages to the extent of $287.90, which she said was the value of the broken and missing articles. The things said to be missing ranged from feather dusters to two tons of coal.

Mr. Speir married Miss Lucrie Fordham and is a member of several clubs. Mrs. Varnum, prior to her marriage to Mr. Ingersoll, her first husband, was Miss Katherine Saunders. Mr. Varnum, who is a lawyer, with offices at 62 William Street, is a member of the Union and various other well-known clubs.

the whole picture game business is a bunko game?"

Statement by Clausen.

William Clausen, when seen before his arrest yesterday at his shop, had this to say:

"Mr. Evans is perfectly aware that several pictures which he has purchased at different times have been retouched, and even completely done over. There were several such in his sale, which I managed, at Chickering Hall on Feb. 1 and 2, 1900. For instance, Wyant's 'In the North Woods,' described in the catalogue as 'a strong and effective example.' This picture was at first a mere sketch, just rubbed in, which after Mr. Wyant's death was given by Mrs. Wyant to Carlton Wiggins, and afterward sold to a Mr. Rice, a jeweler, who in turn disposed of it to Mr. Evans for $150. This picture was unsigned. Mr. Evans asked me to get Mrs. Wyant to come to the shop, and wanted me to persuade her to sign the picture. I finally succeeded in doing this. Then Mr. Evans engaged Arthur Dawson to repaint the picture. In its remade state it sold for $650, but there was no mention made in the catalogue of the retouching process.

"Another picture, Homer Martin's 'Westchester Hills,' was described in the catalogue as 'a magnificent landscape, one of the finest of the Homer Martins. This picture was brought to me with a hole in it by Mr. Evans, who asked me to engage Mr. Dawson to repaint it, which I did. The sky was entirely done over.

"One of the pictures in the Corcoran Gallery group, Blakelock's 'Canoe Builders,' was returned to this shop by Mr. Evans only a few months ago to be retouched, and I saw that this was done for him. The picture left this shop only two months ago.

"As for the three pictures which Mr. Evans alleges are fraudulent, I can only assert that he must be entirely mistaken. I bought those pictures from men whose names are good, and these names I have given to Mr. Evans. For months Mr. Evans and his attorney have pestered me about this matter. One day Mr. Lawrence, his lawyer, came to me and said that unless I refunded the money for the three pictures they would take immediate legal steps. I refused to refund the money and I urged them to start suit. To-day I understand that an action will be taken and I shall be glad to have the matter settled once and for all. My lawyer is Jerome Eisner."

Mr. Evans, when this was repeated to him later in the day, said: "Mr. Clausen's statements are ridiculous and untrue. I have never authorized the repainting of any pictures. I have never asked Mrs. Wyant to sign a picture for me. Henry Ranger introduced Arthur Dawson to me, and that painter repaired for me a cracked painting by Ulrich on one occasion, but the two examples which Mr. Clausen mentions are absolutely false.

"As for the Blakelock, that artist used much bitumen in his painting, and as a result when his pictures are put in too warm rooms the colors run. "The Canoe Builders" had an accident of this sort occur to it, and as a result I sent it back to New York for repairs. Beers Brothers did this work for me, which was merely a question of holding the color in the canvas. The picture was not changed in the least.

"My attention was first called to the fraudulency of the three pictures by Miss Mechlin, the art critic, in Washington. She discovered that the Homer Martins were mounted on a kind of stretcher which was not invented until after Martin's death.

"Afterward Henry Ranger and various other artistic friends called my attention to other facts, and I was practically assured that the pictures were not what they pretended to be, although they are all intrinsically beautiful. As a result I have had them removed from my gift to the Nation. I have asked Mr. Clausen to make restitution, and have tried to save him from any public scandal. But I feel that it is my duty to find out about the pictures in some way or other, and a suit seems to be the only way."

STANDARD OIL CAPITAL CUT.

Iowa Company Reduces Stock from $1,000,000 to $1,000.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., May 15.—At the annual meeting of the Standard Oil Company of Iowa, which was held at Council Bluffs yesterday, the articles of incorporation were amended so as to reduce the capital stock from $1,000,000 to $1,000 and the limit of indebtedness from $666,666 to $666.66.

It is thought here that the action was taken with a view of the Iowa taxes, as the officials are beginning to enforce the laws which tax corporations on their capital stock.

BIG CROWD AT DALY'S ASSEMBLED BY SMOKE

There Was a $5 Blaze in a Jewelry Store Just Below the Theatre Office.

SOME SMOKE IN PLAYHOUSE

But the Girl Ushers Were Reassuring and the Play Went Serenely On—Traffic Blocked Outside.

Smoke issuing from the windows of Daly's Theatre, at Thirtieth Street and Broadway, last night, sent there in a hurry six fire engines, the big hook and ladder from Thirty-third Street using a siren which made the cab horses rear, and Fire Chief Croker, in his red automobile. All other traffic was blocked for fifteen minutes, and a crowd numbering at least a thousand stopped on the way theatreward to see what it was all about.

The fire whence the smoke came was extinguished by a hand grenade, and did about $5 worth of damage. It started in the rear of A. Goldberg's jewelry store, officially the Burma Diamond Company, at 1,225 Broadway, almost immediately beneath the office of Daly's Theatre, on the half floor above.

The store was closed at 7 o'clock. The smoke began to rise about 8:20 o'clock from a room in the rear where boxes for packing jewelry were stored. In the theatre the performance of "Girls" had just begun. The smoke passed up an air shaft in dense volumes and through an open window entered a corridor leading to the office of the theatre, whence it got through two open exit doorways into the auditorium. Some smoke ascending to the second floor above the office escaped through an open window into Broadway, and this gave the impression that the theatre was afire.

Some of the audience became restless when the smoke began to pour in, and Edward E. Lyons, the manager, promptly instructed the girl ushers, who were looking rather thoughtful themselves, to go around and assure the people that there was no danger, as the fire was not in the building. Emmet Hammett, manager of the "Girls" company, also told the ticket taker, Edward Rauscher, to stop taking tickets, lest there should be a panic in the theatre and a rush to get out.

Meantime, while the engines were dashing up with clanging gongs and shrill whistles, the theatre fireman took the smoking-room hand grenade, strapped it on his back, broke into the rear of the jewelry store with his axe, and put the fire out without the aid of a single engine. No lives were in danger except that of a black cat which had been shut up in the store, and flew out like a cannon shot when the fireman went in.

The play went on serenely amid the noise in Broadway, and the people kept their seats. Mr. Lyons shut the iron doors leading to the theatre and drove the smoke out through the windows with the electric fans. But outside the street cars were blocked, and the crowd was so dense that the police reserves were sent from the West Thirtieth Street Station, ready to keep fire lines.

One of the Battalion Chiefs said that the interest of New Yorkers in a fire lay in its situation. Had the smoke been seen coming out of a building in any other locality than Broadway at 8:20 P. M. it would have been promptly extinguished and no one would have been any the wiser.

$700 IN CONSCIENCE MONEY.

Secret Society Receives Cash from an Anonymous ex-Official.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, N. J., May 15.—From some unknown person, Warren Council, 16, Jr. O. U. A. M., has received nearly $700. The money is said to be due the council from some former official. Who the guilty person may have been officers of the council refuse to say. The money was in bills and was received by mail by Jacob H. Hahn, Financial Secretary of the council.

An unsigned and undated note said that several years ago the writer was an officer of the council and appropriated funds belonging to the council. He said his conscience had troubled him, and he had worked hard for several years to save the money and at last had done so. The amount, the writer said, represented the principal and interest at the rate of 3 per cent.

No one knows of any irregularity in the funds of the council, and lodge officers refuse to discuss the matter, although admitting that the money was received in bills by mail, but that the postmark was illegible. The council is one of the largest in the State, having 500 members, and the money will be used in furnishing new lodgerooms.

MAYOR PRAISES THE POLICE.

Congratulates Bingham on Their Appearance in the Annual Parade.

Mayor McClellan has written to Police Commissioner Bingham congratulating him upon the splendid appearance of his force at the annual parade last Saturday. The Mayor says:

> Never have I seen the men in better physical condition, and their marching spoke well for themselves and their drillmaster. Special praise is due the cavalry, the bicycle men, and the probationary men for their excellent appearance and their skill in manoeuvres.
>
> It was an exhibition of which every man who participated may feel proud.

The Mayor's letter, by the Commissioner's order, has been posted in every station house in the city.

BISHOPS PASS THE LIE.

Dispute at General Conference May Lead to Charges.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 15.—The lie was passed between Bishop William Burt of Zurel, Switzerland, and Bishop I. B. Scott, colored, of Liberia, at the close of to-day's session of the Methodist Episcopal Conference, and as a result charges may be preferred before the conference against Bishop Scott.

The colloquy grew out of an incident in Africa a year ago. Bishop Burt was sent there to assist Bishop Scott in presiding over annual conferences in Liberia, and to supervise the latter's work generally while he was there.

It is stated that Bishop Scott, after he arrived in Baltimore, said that Bishop Burt told him while in Africa that he should be subject to orders of Bishop Hartzell. This came to the ears of Bishop Burt, and he took Bishop Scott to task for the statement. Bishop Burt says he told Bishop Scott to co-operate with Bishop Hartzell, and not that he should be subject to the latter's orders.

This afternoon when the Bishops met they became excited. Delegates near them heard Bishop Burt say to Bishop Scott:

"You lied!"

"I did not," replied the colored Bishop. "You lied about me, you know you did."

"I tell you I did not lie about you."

"You did lie about me," returned Bishop Burt, "and if you do not correct it I am going to report you to this conference and have the matter straightened out."

The Bishops then separated.

There were indications to-day that the general conference will not elect as many new Bishops as had been expected. It has been thought that the number elected would be eight, but it now seems certain that the committee will recommend that the total number of Bishops be made less than it has been hitherto, but that there be no reduction in the foreign field. Economy is said to be the actuating idea.

CHURCH WORK CRITICISED.

Should Make Poverty the Sin of the Well-to-Do, Says Pastor Wells.

DETROIT, Mich., May 15.—Animated discussion of "The Place of Organized Christianity in Modern Life" occurred at the forenoon session to-day of the Episcopal Church Congress. The Rev. Hubert W. Wells of Wilmington, Del., criticised the Church as now organized, saying "the real business of the Church is the reconstruction of society after the mind of Christ. This the Church has neglected.

"Poverty must be eliminated by calling it a sin—the sin of the well-to-do and prosperous. Make it impossible for any man to come to the altar until he has repented of his sin."

SURE MRS. GUNNESS IS DEAD.

State's Attorney Satisfied That Skull Found Is Hers.

LAPORTE, Ind., May 15.—"Identification of the piece of jawbone taken from the ruins of the Gunness farmhouse as a portion of Mrs. Belle Gunness's skull bears out most conclusively the contentions of the State regarding the identity of the bodies found in the cellar on April 28. It is the clinching bit of evidence which should set at rest the rumors that Mrs. Gunness had escaped."

This statement was made by Ralph N. Smith, Prosecuting Attorney, to-night. It followed a report from Dr. C. P. Norton, a dentist, who found that the piece of charred bone presented characteristics which he had observed while working on her teeth. Only two natural teeth had remained in the woman's mouth, and the piece of bone found yesterday shows all the teeth except these two had been extracted from the jaw of the skull to which it belonged.

The first of the Gunness victims to be buried with Christian rites was buried by lantern light to-night in a cemetery on the outskirts of Laporte. The body was that of Andrew K. Helgelein of Mansfield, S. D.

The body was released for burial this evening, after Coroner Mack had received the reports of Bertillon experts who have examined it and compared their findings with figures taken from the records of the Minnesota Penitentiary at Stillwater. Two officials of the Michigan City Prison performed the work yesterday, and Edward A. Evans fo the Chicago Police Identification Bureau did similar work to-day. Both reports were to the effect that it was the body of Helgelein.

The search of the Gunness premises to-day revealed little of importance. Some relics showing that Mrs. Gunness had made a study of surgical lore were picked up. Charred leaves of books, on which sufficient print remained to show that the leaves were devoted to anatomy, were found. Another ruined book was a treatise on hypnotism.

PLAY CARDS FOR CHARITY.

Annual Festival of the Catholic Summer School at the Waldorf.

The annual festival of the Catholic Summer School of America, also called the Champlain Assembly, was held at the Waldorf-Astoria last night and attended by over 2,000 Catholic men and women of New York. The whole of the first floor of the hotel was devoted to the reception and entertainment of the guests.

Tables were arranged for 1,500 bridge and euchre players to play ten games, for which there were 250 prizes. Three cash prizes amounting to $50 were balloted for with the slips attached to each ticket of admittance.

The festival began at 9 o'clock with a concert by Van Barr's Old Guard Band, followed by the card tournament. Dancing began at midnight.

Among those who had boxes in the balcony of the ballroom were Mgr. Lavelle, Charles F. Murphy, Michael E. Bannin, Patrick McGowan, President of the Board of Aldermen; Thomas H. Kelly, the Rev. J. McMahon, James Farley, T. F. Ryan, John Whalen, E. E. McCall, J. J. O'Donohue, and Frank S. Gannon.

Others present were John T. Crimmins, Justice E. B. Amend, John J. Delany, Hugh Kelly, the Rev. F. H. Wall, the Rev. John J. Byrne, and the Rev. John T. Driscoll.

Archbishop Farley was present for a short time in Father Lavelle's box with Father Roche.

The proceeds of the festival are to be devoted to further the work of the Summer school on Lake Champlain.

SENATE AND HOUSE CLASH ON CURRENCY

New Aldrich Bill Substituted for Vreeland Bill by Senate—House Rejects It.

FIGHT IN CONFERENCE NOW

Burton and Vreeland Say They Will Never Accept the Aldrich Bill—Talk of a Cannon Trick.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—When the Vreeland Currency bill was reported to the Senate to-day it met a swift and violent end. The Senate fell upon it and in its place put a modified form of the Aldrich measure. It then asked for a conference with the House, and the inflexibility of the Senate's decision to have the Aldrich bill or nothing was forecast in the appointment of its conferrees. Five of its seasoned veterans were chosen in Aldrich, Allison, Hale, Daniel, and Teller.

Immediately the currency question was sent back to the House, Mr. Burton moved to send it to conference, and in some sharp talk declared that if the House accepted the Aldrich bill it would be over his vote. By a party vote his motion was carried. The conferrees named by the Speaker were Vreeland, Burton, and Weeks, Republicans; and Lewis and Pujo, Democrats. Lewis is absent from the city and John Sharp Williams asked Cannon to name another Democrat, but the Speaker refused. As was announced some time ago in these dispatches, Fowler was ignored.

Talk of Another Insurrection.

The declaration of Mr. Burton of unrelenting hostility to the Aldrich bill expresses the feeling of a good many influential men in the House. Before he started for New York to-day Mr. Vreeland made a similar declaration. There is already much talk of another insurrection, which is to do great things in the way of insisting on the House bill and preventing a surrender to the Senate.

But it is a bad time just now for insurrections. Members of the House are beginning to recall forcibly the word that went around before the session opened that Senator Aldrich and Speaker Cannon had reached an agreement as to what should be done on currency, and it would be a rash prophet who would undertake now to say that Aldrich will not win in the end. There is always the chance that a House insurrection will win, but if it does it will be the first time in many years.

There is only one point on which there is substantial agreement between the two Houses of Congress, and that is on the currency commission plan. The Senate scheme differs slightly from that of the House by having all of the eighteen chosen from the Senate and House with none named by the President. If any bill is agreed on in conference some commission provision will be included.

Wheels Greased in Senate.

The procedure in the Senate was arranged beforehand. The Vreeland bill was reported from the House at 12:05 o'clock, and Mr. Aldrich promptly moved that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. At 12:20 o'clock, without leaving his seat, he arose and solemnly announced that the committee had unanimously authorized him to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and substitute the Aldrich measure, with some changes.

The bill then went to the calendar, and was taken up later in the day. Mr. Newlands spoke at length against the removal of the clause providing for reserves. He also wanted changes made to permit of the legalization of Clearing Houses. Aldrich replied that the question of reserves was one that could best be determined in conference.

After a scattered debate, in which Aldrich was the central figure, a roll call on the vote was ordered, and the bill was amended by a vote of 47 to 20. The Democrats who joined with the Republicans in favor of the substitution were Daniel, Johnston, Owen, and Teller, the first and last named of the four being members of the Finance Committee. The Republicans who voted with the Democrats in opposition were Borah, Bourne, Brown, and Heyburn. Money and Bacon explained that they had not voted against the substitution of the Aldrich bill because they thought the Vreeland measure better, but because they were not in favor of any legislation at all.

"I think there is no Democrat in this Chamber," said Money, "who does not infinitely prefer the Aldrich bill to the one submitted by the House." This expression of the position of the Democrats renders impossible the passage of the Vreeland bill. A member of the Senate Conference Committee said to-night that under no circumstances would the Senate accept it.

Besides cutting out the clause governing reserves, the Senate Finance Committee made various changes in the Aldrich bill. The La Follette amendment, prohibiting National banks from loaning money to corporations in which their officers were interested, was eliminated. Railroad bonds and the bonds of the Philippine and Porto Rican Governments were stricken from the list of securities available as a basis for the issuance of emergency currency. The only securities legally recognized are those issued by States, counties, and municipalities.

The bill, in short, provides that any National bank which is complying with the existing banking law governing currency may issue emergency currency with the consent of the Controller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury. This issue is to be based on bonds of States, counties, or municipalities none of which has defaulted in the payment of principal or interest in ten years preceding and the net funded indebtedness of which does not exceed 10 per cent. of the value of the taxable property, which are to be deposited with the Treasury. Upon these bank notes may be issued to the amount of not to exceed 90 per cent. of the market value of the bonds.

The legal title to all bonds deposited with the Treasury Department is transferred to the Treasurer of the United States. They may be redeemed by their depositors with legal money.

Bankers who have currency outstanding on United States or Panama Canal bonds bearing interest at 2 per cent. are compelled to pay a tax of one-quarter of 1 per cent. in January and July of each year, and when such bonds bear higher interest a tax of one-half per cent. will be levied each six months. On bonds other than those of the Government the owners must pay for the first four months a monthly tax of one-half per cent., and thereafter a tax of three-quarters per cent. on all outstanding notes.

The redemption provision for the present currency is maintained, and it is provided that the emergency circulation may be retired without limit by deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States.

Provision also is made for the imposition of a tax on Government deposits in National banks, not to exceed 1 per cent. The rate is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, but it must be uniform throughout the United States.

Sharp Talk in the House.

When the action of the Senate was reported to the House, Mr. Burton moved that the Senate amendments be disagreed with and that the bill be sent to conference. John Sharp Williams used half of the twenty minutes allowed the minority, and the remainder of his time he yielded to Mr. Fowler. Mr. Burton alone spoke for the motion.

"This bill is worse than the original Aldrich bill," said Mr. Williams, "and it is even worse than the Vreeland bill, though that seems almost incredible."

Mr. Burton replied sharply to insinuations made by John Sharp Williams and the open charges of Representative Prince, the most bitter of the Republican insurgents, that the Speaker had intended all along to pass the Aldrich bill and this was his way of doing it. Mr. Prince said that the "cloven hoof" was beginning to show.

"I think the Aldrich bill has been much abused," said Mr. Burton, "but it is in point of fact not as good as the Vreeland bill. I will never vote for it, and I will support to the last the essential principles of the Vreeland bill. If the House passes the Aldrich bill, it will be over my vote."

TO PROTECT N. Y. HARBOR.

House Measure Providing Against Dumping of Refuse Passed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—The House to-day passed Representative Greene's bill to protect the harbor of New York from deposits of injurious or unhealthy substances.

It forbids scows to receive garbage without first getting a permit from the Supervisor of the harbor, defining the limits within which the refuse may be dumped. It empowers Inspectors to arrest persons without process for violations. The Inspectors may also enter manufacturing and gas and oil works to see that no sludge or acid is permitted to run into the tidal waters of the harbor.

Waterways and Government Employes Measures Reported in House.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—Two bills included in the President's legislative programme were reported favorably to the House to-day. One was Mr. Burton's, providing for the continuance of the Inland Waterways Commission, and the other Mr. Alexander's, granting compensation to Government employes injured or killed in the course of their duties.

Mr. Burton's bill carries an appropriation of $20,000 to be used for expenses and the summoning of experts. Mr. Alexander's provides for the continuance of an injured man's pay for one year, or, in case of his death, for the payment of a year's wage to his widow or children less than 16 years old.

PRINT PAPER MAKER DENIES MONOPOLY

President Cowles of American Paper Association Says Competition Is Broad and Free.

TARIFF REMOVAL UNJUST

Declares Some Newspapers Threatened Congressmen with Defeat Unless They Favored Free Paper and Pulp.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—The paper manufacturers to-day continued their testimony before the House Select Committee investigating the paper industry. David Cowles, President of the American Paper and Pulp Association, took the stand this morning and testified for several hours.

Besides making sweeping denials of the charges brought by the publishers against the manufacturers as being in restraint of trade, Mr. Cowles attacked the newspapers, saying they had threatened Congressmen with defeat if they failed to push through the legislation demanded by the publishers in regard to free paper and wood pulp.

"Are you prepared to prove that?" asked Chairman Mann of the committee. "Do you think you are likely to know as much about that as the members of Congress themselves?"

"Well," replied Mr. Cowles, "I have no evidence to prove what I say that would be accepted in accordance with the strict rules of evidence, but what I say is in the air, is of general knowledge, and that is why I bring it to the committee's attention."

"I think," replied Mr. Mann," that you had better confine yourself to things you know about the paper and pulp industry. The rule is that members of Congress know better than outsiders what threats are made against them and for what purpose. As for my personal experience, I have received nothing that could be construed as a threat in this connection from any newspaper."

Mr. Cowles denied emphatically that the manufacturers had made any combination in restraint of trade or that any such combination existed.

"There is competition in the paper business," he said, "as broad and free now as it ever was. In spite of this fact, Congress has been asked to take off the duty on paper and wood pulp as a punishment to us. That would be very unjust."

Mr. Cowles denied a statement of John Norris, representative of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, that an agreement existed between the Canadian manufacturers and the American manufacturers in the East providing that the Canadian manufacturers shall not go into the Eastern market. As a matter of fact, he said that last April Canadian paper had been offered to Herman Ridder, President of the Publishers' Association, at $2.40 per hundred pounds, delivered in the pressroom in New York.

Mr. Cowles reiterated a statement he had made some time ago that wages at his mill had advanced 40 per cent., which statement had been contradicted by Mr. Norris. On the first of April, 1907, he said, his mills changed its shifts, which necessitated an increase of about 50 per cent. in the number of employes.

Mr. Cowles gave figures to illustrate the conditions that surround the manufacture of paper. No one, he said, would go into the business to-day who would not first obtain an adequate amount of timber land to supply the mill permanently with wood. "If you were going to make 6 per cent. on your money invested," he continued, "you would have to make 18 per cent. on the selling price of your product."

Mr. Cowles declared that the manufacture of news print paper had been absolutely unprofitable for the last two or three years. He opposed taking the duty off wood pulp. He though such action would have a demoralizing influence upon the price of paper and would have a tendency to decrease it.

"What would be the effect of taking the tariff off news print paper?" asked Mr. Mann.

"It would open the door to foreign competition outside of Canada," replied Mr. Cowles. "Skilled labor in Canada in some instances is higher than in this country, but in Scandinavia, where a good deal of paper is made, it is much cheaper." He also said that paper was made in Great Britain, Finland, Germany, and Norway, and that the possibilities in Russia were very great.

"If the Canadian Government should levy an export duty on pulp wood and wood pulp, what would be left of the paper industry in the United States in a few years from now?" asked Mr. Mann.

"Little or nothing," replied the witness. "I suppose it would be equally disastrous to the news publishers."

Mr. Cowles was excused for the day, and George C. Sherman, Treasurer of the St. Regis Paper Company, was recalled. He submitted tables made up from his books, showing that the cost per hundred pounds of producing paper in July, 1902, was $1.35 and in February, 1908, $1.70, an increase of 35 cents between those dates.

Mr. Sherman stated that he had sold paper to Herman Ridder as low as $1.75 per 100 pounds, delivered. That was in 1906, he said, and the average cost on the cars at the mills was $1.52 per 100. There was an actual loss on every pound of paper sold him.

TOP PRICE FOR GRANT LETTER

$76 Paid for It at Anderson Sale—Next Best Price for Lincoln Parole.

High prices ruled in the sale yesterday at Anderson's of autograph letters from the correspondence of "Uncle Sam" Ward and Peter Force, the historian. The top figure, $76, was paid for an important civil war letter of Gen. U. S. Grant, dated April 4, 1865, only a few days previous to the surrender of Gen. R. E. Lee.

The next highest price of the sale was $64 for a parole to a Southerner signed by President Lincoln and dated "Executive Mansion, Washington, Oct. 17, 1864." A particularly fine letter of Robert Browning, telling how he came to write his famous "Ride from Ghent to Aix," fetched $50.

One of the most interesting items was a letter written by Daniel Webster to Charles Dickens. It is as follows:

> My dear Sir: If your name had been rightly announced, I should have seen you this morning, tho' I was lying down. They told me it was Mr. Nicholas. I shall be in all the afternoon and quite glad to see you if convenient to you to call. Yours truly,
>
> D. WEBSTER.

This letter sold for $19.

Other interesting items were as follows:

A letter of Chester A. Arthur to Sam Ward, New York, Aug. 6, 1881, relative to the assassination of President Garfield, $9.

A ten-page letter of Madam Blavatsky to Sam Ward, "Editor's office of The Theosophist, Bombay, Jan. 8, 1882," $9.25.

A letter to W. C. Bryant, Roslyn, L. I., Nov. 15, 1867, relative to his "Funeral Hymn," $9.

Two letters of Mark Twain, one dated "Kaltenlenkgeben, 1898," "Go on; fire away; I am a firm and trustworthy target for checks," and the other, dated "London, 1900," "A month ago I put $25,000 into a promising venture here," respectively $4.50 and $6.50.

A letter of William Henry Harrison, Cincinnati, Jan. 14, 1824, in regard to a claim of the War of 1812, $10.50.

One of the famous "Letters de Cachet," signed by Louis XVI. of France in 1788, $12.

A letter of Thomas Paine to Vice President George Clinton, New Rochelle, April 4, 1806, $14.

A letter of Sir Walter Scott in regard to "Provincial Antiquities," $15.

A damaged letter of George Washington, Mount Vernon, July 15, 1798, to Chief Justice John Marshall, $38.

A letter of Oscar Wilde to Sam Ward, signed in full, which is an unusual form, Wilde generally signing his letters "Oscar," $10.50.

Autographs of some well-known American financiers and statesmen did not sell so high. Two letters of J. Pierpont Morgan sold respectively for 50 cents and 25 cents; a letter signed but not written by President Roosevelt, in regard to the death of a Rough Rider, fetched $2.60; four letters of Russell Sage to Ward sold for 50 cents, 80 cents, $1, and 60 cents, and a letter by August Belmont, the elder, brought 20 cents.

GUNDLACH STATE WITNESS.

Takes the Stand of His Own Motion to Testify in Note Swindle Case.

When the examination of Charles Barry and John Gundlach, two members of the alleged note swindling gang which is being rounded up by the District Attorney's office, was taken up again before Magistrate Moss in the Tombs Court yesterday, Gundlach himself took the stand of his own motion to testify against Barry. He confirmed on his direct examination, in general, the statements of the members of the cutlery firm of Sherman & Co. of Keyport, N. J., who are the particular complainants in the action, telling how he got $108,000 in notes from that firm under an agreement by which he was to get one-half the proceeds and the firm the other half.

Barry, according to Gundlach, acted as his legal adviser in matters connected with the deal and tried also to place the issue of notes, but without success. Gundlach also said that Barry co-operated with him in sending to Sherman & Co. when payment was demanded, on account of the proceeds of the notes supposed to be discounted, a draft for $1,500 which turned out to be no good. Some of the Sherman notes were put in the hands of E. E. Trautwin, who has figured in several of the transactions under investigation by the District Attorney's office. Assistant District Attorney Kindleberger asked Gundlach if he knew that Trautwin was a man with a prison record. Gundlach said he didn't.

After the State had closed its case, Barry's attorney, Amos H. Evans, moved to dismiss the complaint, but Magistrate Moss denied the motion. The case was then adjourned until next Tuesday at 2 o'clock. This morning Roger Morgan, formerly of Hopper, Morgan & Co., a concern that fell into the hands of the note brokerage combination, is going to tell Mr. Kindleberger and Detectives McConville and Nelson of Police Headquarters his experiences.

SUBWAY FOR STATEN ISLAND.

Richmond Residents Ask for Extension of Brooklyn Line Under the Narrows.

Staten Islanders appeared in force yesterday afternoon before the Public Service Commission to urge the claims of Richmond for a share in the new subways that the city is planning to build. They want an extension of the Brooklyn Fourth Avenue line under the Narrows and through the centre of the island. They declared that by such an investment the city could not lose, and urged that it would be much better to change the present plans of the proposed Fourth Avenue line to accommodate the Richmond crowds than to alter the road after it is built. It was suggested that the subway should not only be made a four-track instead of a double-track route, but that it should be constructed on one side of the stret, so that still more tracks might be put on at some future date.

Borough President Cromwell of Richmond led in the argument for the Staten Island subway.

PRIVATE SUED FOR HIS PAY

Alleging His Enlistment Constituted a Contract with Government—President Acted with Congressional Authority.

Judge Hough, in the United States Circuit Court, upheld yesterday in every respect the Government in the suit brought by Private Oscar W. Reid of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry to test the validity of the action of the President in discharging a part of that regiment on account of the "shooting up" of Brownsville, Texas, two years ago. Reid's action was brought to recover the pay and emoluments accruing from the date of his discharge to the end of his enlistment, which has about a year to run. The decision was on a demurrer interposed by the Government, and Judge Hough, in sustaining the demurrer, dismisses the suit on the ground that the questions raised constitute a complete defense.

Judge Hough takes the broadest ground in sustaining the President's legal right to dismiss enlisted men, under the Fourth Article of War, adopted by Congress in 1806, which provides that no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before the end of his term of service unless "by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a court-martial." He goes further and says: "That it is beyond the power of the judicial branch to coerce or review the discretion of the executive is familiar doctrine."

Elsewhere in his opinion Judge Hough declares:

> Whether Reid or his comrades, or any of them, were guilty of the riotous disturbance in question, or whether Reid personally committed any infraction of good order or military discipline, or whether he is in fact a desirable soldier, or knew or withheld anything tending toward the discovery of the perpetrators of the Brownsville riot, or whether, so far as Reid or others are concerned, the President's action was unnecessarily severe, cruel, or unjust, are questions beyond this judicial investigation.
>
> The material inquiries seem to me very few. By his contract Reid assumed the burden of military service not for a definite time, but for three years, "unless sooner discharged by proper authority." Nothing is expressed in the enlistment papers as to what reason shall be sufficient for early discharge, and if the engagement be treated merely as a civil contract of hire, the Government would be entitled to dispense with Reid's services under it at any time, provided the authority, i. e., the officer directing discharge or dismissal, be "proper."
>
> This petitioner was, so far as formalities attending his severance from the service are concerned, properly discharged—that is, his discharge paper was correct in form and signature, and so much is not denied. But the "authority" causing and directing his discharge was the President of the United States, who personally gave the order therefor, so that the final question upon assumption very favorable to petitioner is whether the President, as Commander in Chief of the army, is "proper authority" to determine in invitum a soldier's enlistment.

The Articles of War, the decision says, constitute the only statutory declaration concerning discharges from the military service, and it then quotes from Article IV., which says that no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before the end of his term of service "except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial."

"I am quite unable to perceive," Judge Hough says, "how the President's right to terminate a soldier's engagement could be more explicitly recognized, and, indeed, conferred—if recognition seems to imply some antecedent right."

Judge Hough quotes further from the case of the United States vs. Blakeley, in which it was held that "the military contract may be dissolved at any moment by the supreme authority of the Government," and says that this historical view of the soldier's relation to the Government or the Crown antedates the founding of this Nation and is the accepted doctrine of the British military establishment, upon which ours is modeled.

"It is, however, further asserted," continued the opinion, "that some infraction of law was wrought by forcing upon Reid a 'discharge without honor.' The phrase is not known to the statutes; it is found only in the army regulations, which are from time to time promulgated by the Secretary of War, but do not bind either the Secretary that makes them or much less the Commander in Chief. The exact method of this soldier's discharge and the quantum or kind of character that should be given him not being regulated by statute must necessarily be left in the discretion of the executive officer having power to grant some kind of discharge. That discharge with a very bad character is not a punishment to the man discharged within the meaning of any Federal statutes is settled."

The case will be appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

ALIMONY FOR WOMAN DOCTOR.

Mrs. Margaret Holland Wins First Hearing in Divorce Suit—Letter Did It.

Pending the trial of a suit for divorce which Dr. Margaret Holland has brought against her husband, Herbert H. B. Holland, Supreme Court Justice Davis ordered Holland yesterday to pay his wife $25 a week alimony and counsel fee of $150. In an affidavit Mrs. Holland says they were married at Los Angeles on April 17, 1907, and charges her husband with misconduct. She says that his income is about $5,000 a year.

In his answer Holland denies his wife's allegations, saying he is almost without means of support, and is indebted to various hotels in New York. Regarding his wife, he says she is a graduated physician and surgeon, and enjoys a lucrative practice. The answer then goes on to state:

> That she is managing two natives of India who are wonderful magicians or sleight of hand performers. That said natives of India have performed before the editorial staff of one of the great metropolitan daily newspapers recently, and as a result she has entered into a profitable contract with said newspaper, and is also negotiating for the said natives of India to perform on the vaudeville stage.

Holland says he is now in Toronto, Canada, endeavoring to obtain employment.

In contravention of this Mrs. Holland submitted a letter recently received from her husband. It was dated Toronto, April 17, and read in part as follows:

> My Dear Margaret: We were married a year ago to-day. I have thought of this since I left New York. I must let you know where I am, because I love you, dear, and I trust to your honor not to show this to any one. I got my appointment yesterday on the trans-continental railroad as divisional engineer at $300 a month, and everything found. I have great chances of rapid promotion if I stick to this job. If you have not obtained your divorce, please drop everything and let us forget the past. I can send you $150 a month, and when I liquidate my New York liabilities I may be able to send you more. I am sad and downhearted for you. God knows how much I want you. Yours as ever.
>
> BOB.

The contradictory statements in the Holland letter and affidavit seemingly influenced the court to enter the order against Holland.

SAVED BY A CLOTHESLINE.

Boarders Lower Landlady from Third Floor of Tenement on Fire.

Threatened with suffocation at a fire in her home yesterday morning, Mrs. Nora Grimplet of 316 East Sixty-second Street was lowered from the third floor to the yard on a slender clothesline by two young men who boarded with her. Several other women in the house fainted and were carried down the fire escapes. A number of children were also rescued. The blaze was confined to the dumbwaiter shaft, but the smoke was stifling and filled the whole house.

Earl Sutliffe and John Ammerman, who rescued Mrs. Grimplet, got down safely, one by the fire escape, the other on the rope.

DYE FACTORY BURNS; FIREMEN IN PERIL

Two Imprisoned on Shaky Ladder with Multi-Colored Flames Above and Below.

A SPECTACULAR BLAZE

Tons of Dyestuffs Color Flames Blue, Purple, and Orange and Smoke Purple—Six Firemen Hurt.

While multi-colored flames and greenish smoke poured from the windows of Read, Holliday & Sons' four-story dye factory at 7 Platt Street yesterday afternoon, and the sound of explosions came from inside the burning building, the lives of three firemen were in peril for a few minutes.

Lieut. Flanigan of Engine 7 had ordered a ladder placed against the building so that a line of hose could be trained through the windows of the second floor. Firemen Riley and Allen dragged a line of hose up the ladder to the level of the windows.

They did not have a chance to direct the nozzle toward the nearest window before the water was turned on. In an instant the big hose began to twist and writhe like a monstrous serpent, and the two men trembled on their perch. Flames were jutting out of the first floor windows, and from the windows of the second floor came tongues of fire which licked at their faces and singed their hair. The ladder, too, was shaking, and seemed about to fall.

Below the crowd was holding its breath, fearing every instant to see the men dashed to the street.

"Hold fast!" shouted Lieut. Flanigan. And with that he sprang up the ladder and grabbed the hose. It took all his strength and the strength of the two other men to get the hose in line. And while they were struggling the top of the ladder slipped. It slid along the face of the building and lodged against a window frame on the top floor. As the water from the hose went hissing into the burning building and the men on the ladder braced their feet for the fight a cheer went up.

It is not often that firemen cheer their comrades, for all are used to danger, and acts of courage are their almost daily routine, but yesterday twenty or more firemen who had witnessed Lieut. Flanigan's rescue of his comrades cheered lustily.

There were other rescues at the fire, and seven firemen were injured, one of them seriously. It is feared that he may lose the sight of his eyes. This was Joseph B. Griffon of No. 4 Engine. He was overcome by the fumes from cases of acids and other chemicals, and some of the dyestuff got in his eyes. He was dragged from the building by his comrades and sent to St. Gregory's Hospital. Other firemen injured were:

PATRICK SULLIVAN, Truck 1, hands cut by flying glass.

DAVID STARK, Engine 4, cut hands.

Capt. SLATER, Engine 4, burned by a back draught on the first floor.

PETER TONER, Engine 7, hands cut by glass.

Lieut. FLANIGAN, Engine 7, hands cut by glass.

DANIEL LEARY, Engine 31, hands cut by glass.

The men were treated on the scene by Dr. Mortimer Bennett of St. Gregory's Hospital, and Dr. Harry Archer of the Fire Department.

Capt. Slater was dragged from the building by his men. He was leading three of his men in the attack on the first floor when a back draught suddenly flared in his face. His hair and eyebrows were singed and his flesh was blistered. He staggered and fell, but was quickly carried to the street.

The building at 7 Platt Street was owned and occupied by Read, Holliday & Sons, Limited, manufacturers of dye stuffs and chemicals. It was completely destroyed and the loss is estimated at $75,000. Twenty or more men and women were at work in the building when the fire started, but all got out safely.

Just where or how the blaze started is not known, but it is believed that it originated in the rear of the laboratory on the third floor and spread quickly both up and down. The top floor was used as a store house for dyes, and several tons of manufactured material were there. When the floors fell in this dye stuff formed a many-colored pulp, 3 feet deep, on the first floor. Three explosions occurred in the laboratory.

To those who watched the blaze it resembled a big Fourth of July celebration. Red, blue, green, purple, and orange flames flared skyward, and the dense green smoke settled down over the financial district.

The flames managed to spread to the rear of 5 Platt Street, occupied by the New York & London Drug Company, and did slight damage to the top floor. Most of the books of Read, Holliday & Son were destroyed. They were on the second floor. A few were rescued by the bookkeeper and his clerks when they fled. The door of a big safe on the second floor was slammed shut by one of the clerks. The employe said that a large sum of money was in this safe.

FIERCE BATTLE IN ALGERIA.

French Have 78 Casualties and the Fanatical Arabs Lose Heavily.

ALGIERS, May 15.—The French force under Gen. Vigy lost thirteen men killed and sixty-five wounded in a fierce engagement yesterday with the fanatical Arabs. The engagement lasted the greater part of the day, and Boudenib, the stronghold of Mulai Hassen, was bombarded. Three officers are among the French killed. The Arab losses are described as heavy.

This engagement was preceded on May 13 by a battle in the vicinity of Beni Ouzian, which also lasted all day. The French force was composed of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, and it drove the Arabs in the direction of Boudenib.

To Keep Chinese Out of Siberia.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 15.—The Chinese Legation here is in receipt of a telegram from a Chinese society at Khabarovsk, Siberia, complaining of the arrest there of 200 Chinese residents because they were without passports. The Russian authorities raided the Chinese theatre and imprisoned the entire audience, including many prominent merchants. It is apparent that Russia is acting upon a desire to prevent Siberia from being overrun with Chinese.

Mme. Gould and Sagan Go to Paris.

MONTE CARLO, May 15.—Prince Helie de Sagan, Mme. Gould, and the latter's children left for Paris by to-night's express.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

LONDON, May 15.—The by-election in the North Division of Shropshire to fill the vacancy in the House of Commons caused by the death of W. S. Kenyon-Slaney has resulted in the return of the Unionist candidate, Beville Stanier, by a majority of 951. The Unionists have held this seat for nearly twenty-five years.

TOKIO, May 15.—The elections to-day passed off quietly in Tokio and it is believed the same conditions prevailed in the provinces. The absence of excitement is unprecedented. The official results will be announced a week hence.

MARSEILLES, May 15.—Major Gen. Leonard Wood, U. S. A., accompanied by the members of his family, arrived here to-day from Manila by way of Gibraltar. He left at once for Switzerland, whence he will go to Paris. Gen. Wood is in good health.

CUXHAVEN, Germany, May 15.—The English steam fishing boat Taurus, from Grimsby, England, while fishing near Amrum, an island of Prussia in the North Sea, has been arrested by a German torpedo boat which was cruising along the fishing grounds at the time. The Taurus was brought in to Cuxhaven.

PEKING, May 15.—Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister to China, will leave here in July for Tokio. He will be succeeded by Baron H. Ijuin, at present counselor of the Japanese Embassy in London.

PARIS, May 15.—The Government at Washington has proposed Shanghai, Jan. 1, 1909, as the time and place for the holding of the coming international conference at which the powers are to fix upon the details for the cessation of the cultivation of opium within their territories in order to assist China in the suppression of the use of opium among the Chinese people. The French Government has accepted the American proposition.

VIOLENT SCENES IN DUMA.

Leaders of Three Parties Exchange Bitter Reflections in Debate.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 15.—The Duma had a stormy session to-day. Vladimir Purishkevich, Monarchist member from Bessarabia, used several epithets, and at one time he was on the point of forcibly attacking Prof. Paul Milyoukov, leader of the Constitutional Democrats. He was restrained only by two of his associates holding him forcibly in his seat.

Later M. Guchkoff, the Octobrist leader, explained his reasons for refusing to permit the speakers of the opposition to reply to the speech delivered yesterday by Assistant Minister of the Interior Makaroff in defense of the retention of several Governors General and the continuance of martial law. He made the charge that part of the Duma had no desire to work, but only wanted to obstruct.

A scene of violent disorder followed. After quiet had been restored, M. Milyoukov replied to M. Buchkoff by declaring that there was no truth in his statement, for which he was rebuked by the President of the House.

ASTRAKHAN, Russia, May 15.—The Director and Vice Director of the prison here have been condemned to eight years in the penitentiary for having inflicted upon certain prisoners such cruel treatment that one of the men died. Five of the prison Wardens got five years at hard labor. The Chief of Police, who ordered the punishment of the prisoners, committed suicide to escape trial.

FEAR ARMOURS IN ENGLAND.

Minister Churchill Will Be Asked About Reported Competition.

LONDON, May 15.—Charles W. Bowerman, who represents the meat market district in the House of Commons, has notified Winston Churchill, President of the Board of Trade, of his intention to question him May 18 regarding what steps he proposes to take to prevent the Armours of Chicago from establishing in this country retail stores for the purpose of supplying meat direct to the consumer.

This query is based on the statement that the Armours are calling up $5,000,000 of new capital for the purpose of dotting London and the provinces with their own retail stores.

CHICAGO, May 15.—Arthur Meeker, a Director of Armour & Co., when shown to-day the dispatch from London that the Armours were to enter the retail meat business in England said: "The report is absurd, and is without any foundation whatever. The Armours are not in the retail trade in this or any other country."

REYES HURRIES TO BOGOTA.

Abandons His Proposed Trip—Plot to Kill Him is Discovered.

PANAMA, May 15.—A letter has been received here from Cartagena, Colombia, saying that Gen. Rafael Reyes, President of that Republic, has changed his plans. Instead of returning to Bogota by way of the Atrato River and the Pacific Coast, a roundabout route, he is already on the Magdalena River, going back to the capital. His sudden departure for Bogota when he had planned to remain at least two months in the coast country is probably connected with the political situation.

Dispatches received here from Port Limon, Costa Rica, relate the discovery of a plot against the life of Reyes. It seems that the Colombian revolutionary refugees who are living in San José held a meeting a few days ago at which it was decided to send a man to Baranquilla to assassinate the President. The Colombin authorities are said to be aware of every step taken by the refugees in Costa Rica and Panama.

Dowager Empress Ages Rapidly.

PEKING, May 15.—The wives of the members of the Diplomatic Corps here were received by the Dowager Empress in audience at the Summer Palace to-day. They noticed that the Empress had aged materially since the last audience of a year ago.

Mikado to Receive Admiral Hemphill.

TOKIO, May 15.—Rear Admiral Hemphill of the United States Navy will have an audience with the Japanese Emperor on the morning of May 18 at a luncheon in the Shiba Palace, to be presided over by Prince Arisugawa.

SUES MRS. YERKES FOR PART OF ESTATE

Lawyer Says She Agreed to Give Him 20 Per Cent. of All She Got from Her Husband.

THEN SHE DISCHARGED HIM

Widow of Street Railway Magnate Takes the Stand—Case Soon Adjourned on Agreement of Counsel.

What promises to be an interesting trial was begun yesterday before Supreme Court Justice Davis in the suit brought by Joseph D. Redding, a lawyer, to recover 20 per cent. of the amount which Mrs. Mary Adelaide Yerkes received from the estate of her husband, Charles T. Yerkes, who died at the Waldorf-Astoria in December, 1905. Scarcely more than a month after Mr. Yerkes's death his widow married Wilson Mizner, from whom she has since got a divorce, with permission to resume the name of Yerkes. The trial had hardly begun when after a conference between the lawyers on both sides it was adjourned until this morning.

Mr. Redding's allegation is that in 1904 he was retained by Mrs. Yerkes to look after her interests in a difference that existed between her and Mr. Yerkes. He said he was retained in writing to obtain for her a share of the property of Yerkes, including a share of his bonds, stocks, and all securities, and that she agreed to give him 20 per cent. of all she ever received, either from Yerkes or his estate. The day after Mr. Yerkes died, Mr. Redding said, he received a letter from Mrs. Yerkes dismissing him.

Mr. Redding said yesterday that he did not know how much of her husband's estate Mrs. Yerkes received, either prior to or after his death, but that he hopes to discover this by examining Mrs. Yerkes.

Mrs. Yerkes testified that she still lives at 864 Fifth Avenue. She was asked how many servants were in the house at the time of Mr. Yerkes's death. This question was objected to by her counsel, and a conference ensued between the lawyers in the case, which resulted in an adjournment until this morning.

Under Yerkes's will, which was filed Jan. 3, 1906, Mrs. Yerkes received $200,000 in cash, the house in Fifth Avenue and all its contents for her lifetime, and one-half of the income from the residuary estate.

"The Pursuit of Pleasure"
An Immense and Wonderful Picture That Thousands Are Coming to See.

THIS CANVAS—10x15 FEET—is the masterpiece of Astley D. M. Cooper, who painted the "Living Statue," recently exhibited here. It is a marvelous Picture, fascinating in its interest, and telling a story which the lecturer in attendance will fully explain. The soft, mellow flesh tints and the realistic modeling of the figures make it seem as though the observer is looking through a window at an actual scene instead of merely seeing a painted canvas.

The Question of VALUE In Summer Clothes for Men

MOST MEN ARE STUDYING THE PRICE QUESTION in their summer expenditures now. Many men are taking more than usual precautions to see that they get full value for the money they spend.

And the result is that the spring season in the Loeser STORE FOR MEN shows an impressive increase in business over what was done in the same months a year ago.

The utmost VALUE in Clothing—what is it and where will you get it?

It is not necessarily low price. There is a price limit below which good Clothing cannot be produced—though much Clothing is offered and widely advertised below this limit of safety. VALUE in Clothing is in good fabrics first, in correct and distinctive style next, and most of all, perhaps, in the unseen but vital WORKMANSHIP on which depends stability and service.

No Clothing is sold here without these three elements of safety. We may also fairly say that no Clothing with the same characteristics is sold outside this Store for as little prices.

We might omit one element—the workmanship—and still have Clothing that was fine in appearance. We might sell those Clothes below our present prices—and sell at a profit. But we would never sell more than one Suit to any man with his wits about him.

The summer stocks—serges, worsteds—every distinctive, correct and comfortable style of the new season will be found here in full readiness now.

Sack Suits	$12.50 to $35	Light Overcoats	$12.50 to $35
Frock Coats and Waistcoats	$20 to $35	Rainproof Overcoats	$12.50 to $25

DR. GOULD DEFENDS CRITICISM OF HEARN

Says the Noted Writer Was Accustomed to Vilify His Best Friends.

HAD PERSECUTION DELUSION

Dr. Gould Will Give Up Books When Charges of Being Trickster Are Omitted — Supported by J. W. Redway.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—Dr. George M. Gould, author of the book "Concerning Lafcadio Hearn," which has caused much criticism, has issued the following statement:

Philadelphia, May 15, 1908.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reply to the letter of Mr. Ellwood Hendrick in your issue of yesterday, I have time only to epitomize a few of the facts in the briefest way. As to the possession of the library of Mr. Hearn, the truth has already been set forth in my volume, "Concerning Lafcadio Hearn." In addition, since my good faith has been questioned, the following facts should be given:

When I was asked to give copies of my letters from Hearn to be included in the forthcoming "Life and Letters," by Miss Bisland, I made it an explicit and fully understood condition that nothing in the "Life and Letters" should be permitted in any way reflecting upon the honor or character of Hearn's friends. I was well aware of Hearn's regrettable tendency to insult and traduce others, and I knew that any such carelessness in editing would bring about endless misunderstandings and wranglings. Mr. MacDonald, acting for the estate and the representative of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., in a letter now before me said:

Feared Being Murdered by Jesuits.

"It is quite true that several of Hearn's letters, both to Mrs. Wetmore (Miss Bisland) and to Ellwood Hendrick, narrate in great detail certain grievances which Hearn fancied himself to have against you. I have, however, been all along of the opinion that these letters are symptomatic of that persecution-hallucination by which Hearn was tormented all his life, and which in his later years, as in his fear of his being murdered by the Jesuits, reached an acute stage. In any case I have given my word that nothing of this sort shall appear in the book without your having an opportunity to refute it."

Imagine my amazement when the book appeared to find the following passage on page 70, volume 1:

"Eventually he gathered a library of considerable value, enriched by his own notes, and many scrap books, but of even this he was deprived later through his inability to cope with those more skilled than himself in world matters, and was never after able to recover it."

Through my Putnam articles and otherwise, it was well known that Hearn had ordered his library sent to me, after he had left my house. The paragraph was such a needless and wicked insult both to Mr. H. M. Alden, who first cared for Hearn's book and to myself, that I at once began protesting to Mr. MacDonald and to the representative of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. against the breaking of our agreement above referred to, and begging that the offensive paragraph should be omitted from future printings. I threatened no suit, made no public clamor, although I naturally felt outraged at the charge that I had tricked Mr. Hearn out of his books. For the year following I appealed to both, showing the most indisputable proofs in Hearn's own handwriting that I had the most perfect right to the books, legally, morally, and as Hearn's friend. Mr. MacDonald would never consent that the imputation should be deleted.

I repeatedly offered to give up the books whenever the charge against me and against Mr. Alden of being tricksters should merely be omitted.

Did Not Want Hearn's Books.

Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. have now courteously dropped the paragraph, and it will not appear in future editions of Miss Bisland's volumes. It is, of course, most unfortunate for me that at Hearn's request I ever consented to receive his library and care for it. It has made me a deal of trouble and expense, as it did Mr. Alden, and we have both been sadly punished for our kindness. Neither of us wanted the books, or found them of value or interest. Hearn engineered the transfer of the books from Mr. Alden's hut to mine, even writing the letters to Mr. Alden in my name. Mr. Alden was glad to be rid of them; also would have been any time since their receipt. Mr. Alden's words, written to a friend in 1890, are:

"All this only makes me sorry, but I can do nothing, as you see. I have sent his books away to Dr. Gould. I refused to take charge of them at first, and yielded only to his importunity. Now he treats this, which involved a cost to me of over $150, as a favor done me. I hope you will be able to keep his friendship."

I tried repeatedly by letter to Hearn in Japan to induce him to permit me to ship the books to him. Two of my letters are referred to in Mr. Hendrick's letter to you, one, in 1893, speaking of "a loving letter" from me, and "asking if I wanted my books back."

Alas, that he was uselessly suspicious of me, and that neither he nor Mr. Hendrick permitted me to send the books to him. Why, Hearn long after he had left me should have sent me notes for $500 and for $60 I could never understand. I never suggested or wanted them and wish he had never done so.

When he left my house, where he had been treated with the utmost patience and kindness during the Summer, he had nothing but the most demonstrative feelings of kindness and affection for both Mrs. Gould and myself, and we felt the same way for him. Indeed, we still feel so, despite, as we now learn, of his turning against us afterward. For we know that it was a pitiful and needless habit he had of suspecting and abusing old friends. To illustrate this "persecution-hallucination," as Mr. Greenslet aptly calls it, I remember his spending about half a day in writing letters which were veritable essays in abuse and vituperation of Mr. Alden, his most serviceable and sincere friend, a man, as all know, beyound suspicion of wrongdoing or self-seeking.

Another instance: Mrs. Gould tells me he had sent Miss Bisland the manuscript of his story "Karma." When it was not returned as soon as he expected he wrote her an awful letter, filled with abuse. With great difficulty he was at last prevailed upon not to send it, as it would end her friendship forever, and because she certainly would not, as he suspected, "steal the story." The manuscript was returned in a day or two and we were all happier. It was pitiful, his habit of vilifying many of his best friends.

If I should quote extracts in proof of all this from letters of others in my possession, Mr. Hendrick would still further misinterpret my motive. And I could have no pleasure in doing so, because it is against my own feelings, and my interest is not at all in such things, except in so far as necessary to glance at them in order to trace the development of the man's literary genius, as any one may see who wishes to see correctly.

I have only alluded in passing to this side of Hearn's character, and the allusions are only such as show a connection with the psychology of the writer and of his related literary work. I did not write in "anger," but really in sorrow of the seamy side, and as little as possible. That is also true friendship as I understand the term. Of all the men in Hearn's world the one who did him the greatest service, who was and who remains most heartily his friend, most unselfish in Hearn's behalf, Page M. Baker, thus writes me of my book:

"You have a very profound knowledge of Hearn's character, or shall I say lack of character, and the limitations of his art."

From an editorial review by Mrs. Marian Baker, "who knew Hearn intimately," in The New Orleans Times-Democrat, May 3, 1908, published with Mr. Baker's sanction, one might quote much that is noble and truthful, e. g., "Dr. Gould was shocked, as many have been, by the revelation of Hearn's utter disloyalty to friends and those who had been helpful to him." The editorial further says:

"In one point in his book Dr. Gould remarks that Hearn never forgave him for inducing him to go to Japan. Doubtless the erratic, unreasonable being did bear a grudge against the man who persuaded him to seek a country where, through marriage—here as elsewhere he was 'always the slave of circumstances'—he found himself enmeshed by serious domestic duties from which he could not break loose. We learn, through his 'Life and Letters,' that his marriage was the suggestion of a Japanese friend (thus we see him again, as Dr. Gould says, as 'the mirror of the friend of the instant.')

His Mission Was to Wander.

"Probably marriage was a mistake for him, though it taught him much. His mission was to wander, following the rainbow and the "ever-receding dream." UPossessing other traits, he would have been more admirable as man and citizen—but we must allow each one his own individuality. Useless to upbraid the wild bird because it cannot play the part of the domestic fowl. All that Hearn was, and was not, gave his work its unique charm. There have been, and will be, greater writers, larger in scope, deeper in philosophy; yet he was somehow different from all others.

"Other bards arise;
But none like thee.'

"Can any one who knows deny that Dr. Gould speaks the truth when he calls Hearn "a chameleon, a mirror, an echo?"

This is the true spirit of kindness and recognition, but of an equal frankness and discrimination in at least a friendly allusion to the other side of the character of a great editor. How another looks at the same facts is shown by an editorial appearing in The Sun of July 27, 1906. From this I quote as follows:

"A Strange Career." "It will surprise no one who knew Lafcadio Hearn at all well to hear that a negro woman in Cincinnati now claims recognition as his widow and seeks to obtain as such a share of the American royalties on his remarkable literary work. Hearn spent several years in the Ohio city, and it is sufficiently notorious that in his purely private and domestic relations he consorted with colored people only. Notwithstanding his extraordinary literary attainments, his profound and varied scholarship, and his brilliant and poetic intellectual equipment, Lafcadio Hearn admitted no member of his own race to genuine intimacy.

"Among his fellow-workers, he was then engaged in journalism, he was regarded with good will, though never with understanding or affection. Of his real and inner life none had the merest inkling. In Cincinnati, as in New Orleans subsequently, he was a mystery. He had no social life of which any white person was even remotely aware.

"In New Orleans, a truly cosmopolitan city and always in close touch with Paris, it soon became known that Hearn, whatever motives may have actuated him in Cincinnati, had a perfectly definite and more or less intelligible purpose so far as concerned his chosen associates there. He had attracted the attention of the French writers of his day by translations of Loti, Maupassant, Gautier, and others.

"His felicitous reproduction of the essence and the aroma of the original persuaded the litterateurs of Paris that a miracle had been vouchsafed to man. When finally he published, not the translation, but the English equivalent of Theophile Gautier's 'Une nuit de Cleopatre," the attitude of the French group was transformed from complacent indulgence to honest and enthusiastic wonder.

A Luminary in Literary World.

"The whole literary and intellectual world realized the presence of a special and peculiar luminary. All this time, however, Hearn was living in the downtown river-front quarter of New Orleans with negroes—not the ordinary 'cornfield' type but the Congo priestesses and prophetesses, as a matter of fact, with no less a personage than Marie Lavaux, the 'Voodoo Queen.' He was studying the Congo superstitions, folk-lore, songs, music, and incantations. It was his passion—the same passion which took him later to the West Indies, to Martinique, to Haiti, the Barbados, always in a fruitless quest.

"For he found that the so-called African music previously elaborated by Gottschalk, as in the bamboula and other compositions, was a mere barbaric adaptation of Spanish melodies, translated by the slaves from San Domingo, while the nursery croonings of the bandana blacks in New Orleans, "Le Crocodile," "Deux Canards," &c., were mutilated French songs brought from Haiti to Louisiana by the refugees.

"From the West Indies Hearn went to Japan, where he formed some sort of domestic relations with a native, and he died there in 1904, while occupying an important professorship in the Imperial College of Tokio. He was the son of a British Navy officer and a Greek girl, a native of one of the islands in the Aegean Archipelago.

"His appearance was forbidding, if not actually repulsive. Only about 5 feet tall, with one eye totally blind and the other so disabled that he had to hold papers within an inch in order to decipher them, always ill-dressed, unkempt, slovenly; with the face of a weasel and the manners of an oaf; he was nevertheless one of the most brilliant and picturesque writers of his day, a profund, versatile, and poetic thinker, one of the greatest masters of occult languages and literature the Christian world has ever known.

"Though Hearn lived with the Cincinnati negress in an intimate domestic relation is easily imaginable, that he actually went through the form of a legal marriage his acquaintances will believe with difficulty. If throughout his career in the United States he ever paid tribute to any convention whatsoever the men who came nearest to knowing him have never heard of it."

J. W. Redway Supports Dr. Gould.

During Mr. Hearn's stay at my house in 1889 a friend was also a member of the household, Mr. J. W. Redway, the well-known geographer, now of Mount Vernon, N. Y. When Mr. Hendricks's letter appeared yesterday I telegraphed Mr. Redway asking him to write me concerning the facts personally known to him. His reply, just at hand, is as follows:

"Mount Vernon, N. Y., May 14, 1908.

"Regarding an article in THE NEW YORK TIMES of the 14th inst., from the pen of Mr. Elwood Hendrick, concerning Lafcadio Hearn, I note several points in which the writer is misinformed.

"Dr. Gould did not 'beg and pray' Hearn 'to pass the Summer' at his (Dr. Gould's) house. When Hearn went to Philadelphia he was invited to visit the Goulds and accepted. Within a few days it transpired that Hearn was without funds. He remained in the family during the Summer, and, to my personal knowledge, was a great trial to both Dr. and Mrs. Gould. At no time was there a thought on the part of either to send Hearn away. Several of the intimate friends of the Goulds urged this step, but Dr. Gould declared that Hearn was scarcely more than a child in world wisdom, and insisted that Hearn should remain until his future could be assured.

"I do not believe that Dr. Gould wrote to Hearn forbidding him to return to the house during his visit to New York; on the contrary, it is my recollection that the doctor sent money to Hearn to pay his passage back to Philadelphia. During all this time Dr. Gould was the only friend Hearn seemed to have in the world who was willing to do anything for him. To many Hearn was accustomed to write most abusive letters. The editor of Harper's Magazine used to receive a generous share, and occasionally Hearn would write several from his room in the third story to the doctor in his office in the second story of the house. These letters would invariably begin in the most formal and polite manner and end in a torrent of vituperation.

"These exacerbations of temper all demonstrated that Hearn was exactly what Gould believed him to be—a man who was scarcely more than a child in much of his intellectual and all of his moral development. Dr. Gould's statement that except for literary excellence he had no character whatever seems to me a fair estimate of him.

"To my certain knowledge, Hearn did not write nor suggest a single word in any of Dr. Gould's medical dictionaries; the assertion, also, that he wrote an article which Dr. Gould signed is without foundation. Hearn's part in the article was merely to hear it read.

"In his correspondence Hearn could not be trusted as to the exact statement of facts; his imagination ran away with him; and his letters to Mr. Hendrick, quoted in THE TIMES, are mainly untrue as to the statement of facts.

"Dr. Gould favored his going to Japan, for the reason that Hearn possessed a most wonderful power of getting to the inner life of a foreign people. I am free to say that I favored it from the fact that living in the same house with him had become very 'upsetting.'

Gould Paid for Hearn's Clothes.

"Mr. Hendrick notes that Dr. Gould has in his possession everything except the clothes that Hearn wore. It is only just that I add that Dr. Gould paid for these clothes. It is now eighteen years since fate brought Hearn and Gould together, and I can certainly testify that it was almost a heart-breaking experience to Dr. Gould and Mrs. Gould. To myself it was a Summer of extreme irritation. To the protests of his friends Dr. Gould used to say that Hearn ought not to be judged by the standards used to judge other men.

"Perhaps Hearn had other friends, but they did nothing for him when he was homeless and destitute. Dr. Gould paid most, possibly all, of Hearn's expenses before he left for Japan.

"I have had no opportunity to read Dr. Gould's book, but the excerpts made by Mr. Hendrick, I should say, are both true and fair. I lived in the house with both, and I think I know both.

"J. W. REDWAY, F. R. G. S."

In protest against this, none was so forward in pointing out the manifest errors and the wrong spirit as I. My reply was published in THE TIMES of Aug. 16, 1906. Among other things I said of this newspaper controversy:

Dr. Gould's Defense of Hearn.

"As a labor of love his American friends are preparing an authoritative biography and collection of his letters in order to secure funds to educate his legitimate son by his Japanese wife. It is a strange perversion of justice that would unnecessarily blacken the dead man's character and prevent accomplishment of the object so many of us have at heart.

"That Hearn had many faults, and that his life in Cincinnati, while a wayward, homeless, penniless boy, was not what it should have been—all this, and what more is true, is not to be denied. But that he was of repulsive face and manners is false. He spent a Summer at my house and at my table, and I know that neither my wife nor myself would have enjoyed his presence as we did if these accusations were true. He was in person exceptionally cleanly, and his manners were gentle. He was shy, and avoided all company, and he was poor, but never ill-clothed.

"But what I wish especially to declare is that, whether what was stated was true or untrue, it has no place at all in literature or decent journalism. Hearn shrank, perhaps morbidly, from all personal and public exhibitions of himself, and presented to the world his writings as works of art and social philosophy, and dragging the personality before the public was unwarranted. But Hearn was dead. Could they not have let him rest—the humble, shrinking, hurt soul, with the sadly maimed body? But, being for the great part untrue, the making of these statements seems to me wholly inexcusable. GEORGE M. GOULD, M. D.

"Philadelphia, Penn., Aug. 14, 1906."

I wish Mr. Hendrick were now welcoming me as a helper in the same way he then did.

Another, answering The Sun, wrote, speakig of me: "Prior to his sailing for Japan he was in the care of a gentleman in Philadelphia, a professional man of high literary attainments and of magnificent character. This gentleman undertook the unthankful task after Mr. Curtis had lost control over his protégé. It was during this period that I knew Hearn, and I certainly did not envy the guardian's task, which was almost heartbreaking. The only acknowledgment or communication that Hearn sent after he had reached Japan was the word 'Myopia,' cabled at the guardian's expense. It was not a code word; it meant nothing. J. W. REDWAY."

"Mount Vernon, N. Y., July 30."

Offered $85 for Library.

Perhaps I should add a few corrections of the erroneous statements of Mr. Hearn and his too trustful friend, Mr. Hendrick. I have had the library valued by an expert antiquarian book dealer, and the best offer I could secure for it was $85. I never wrote him. "He could never see me at my house again." He never did any literary work for me. I never "lent" him money; I gave him much more than he ever acknowledged. After he left my house he wrote me letters from New York of his struggles and troubles in boarding houses.

It seems that his friends there did not take him into their homes, and befriend him as was done in Philadelphia. His report of the correspondence and transfer of the library is incorrect. I never wrote to him that "our correspondence was over." He never helped me to compile a medical dictionary. He never wrote an article for me. I never published an article in The Arena.

I never tried to get into Philadelphia "society"—always hed, indeed, much trouble to keep out of it. I never threatened to publish scandals. It is wiser to let them die a natural death.

To attempt to contradict all the statements and suggestions made in Mr. Hendrick's article would be useless and wearying to those who are informed. If I have, by any oversight, said anything in my volume which is not truthful, I will gladly omit it in future editions and confess my mistake.

I would do so even were it pointed out by one so desirous as is Mr. Hendrick to believe all that Hearn writes as truth and all that I state as of infamous motive. Let us have a little more dispassionateness, more good will to each other, and more desire to find out the truth of the matter. It is becoming painfully evident that Mr. Hendrick is doing his friend no good by his injudicious action.

BOYS GET LONG TERMS IN PRISON FOR MURDER

One Stabbed a Fellow-Prisoner, Three Others Convicted of Killing a Chinaman.

BOY LAUGHS, MOTHER CRIES

Justice Goff Finds in One Case an Abuse of the Probation Law—All Had Been in Reformatories.

Four boys, the oldest 19, the youngest 16, were yesterday sentenced to long terms in prison for manslaughter, three by Justice Goff in the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court, the other by Judge Rosalsky in General Sessions.

Raphael Sforza, 16 years old, was an inmate of the House of Refuge on Randall's Island since 1906 for burglary. On Feb. 6, in a quarrel with a boy named Conner, a general fight followed, in which Sforza stabbed and killed Mayer O'Shansky, one of Sforza's adherents.

In sentencing him, Judge Rosalsky said: "You are young, but yours was a cold, deliberate crime; to show clemency in this case would be a travesty of justice. I sentence you to State Prison for not less than seven years and not more than fifteen years."

The other three, John Bell, 19 years old, of 512 West Twenty-ninth Street; Thomas Haher of 441 West Thirty-third Street, 17 years old, and John Ryan of 500 West Thirty-second Street, shot and killed a Chinaman, Chin Lung, after robbing his laundry in West Thirtieth Street, near Seventh Avenue. Ryan, the leader of the three, shot hm.

The mothers of two of the boys were in court yesterday. Justice Goff had looked up the records of the prisoners and found that all three had served in reformatories, and that Ryan had been released a year ago on a suspended sentence. The Justice said that this was another case where the probation law had been abused. When he sentenced him to fifteen years in prison, the boy's mother left the court sobbing, but Ryan laughed and said, "Thanks, Judge."

Haher and Bell were given not less than nine years and three months nor more than fifteen years and three months. Bell looked serious enough, but Haher returned to the pen laughing.

LIFE SAVERS RESCUED 573.

This Record Made by the American Society in 1907—4,200 Members.

The annual report of the American Life Saving Society, made public yesterday, shows the society has 259 life-saving stations, manned by 4,200 men. They rescued during the past twelve months 573 persons from drowning. In this State the most efficient work was done in this city and along Long Island waters.

In this city 165 life-saving stations were established and equipped, 26 planted along the Long Island shore, 10 at Albany and Troy, 8 along the Hudson, and 7 in other cities. About 400 persons were rescued in this State.

A successful branch of the work is the free teaching of swimming to school children in the public bath in East Twenty-third Street.

BROOKLYN NEWS NOTES.

George Yager, a minor, was yesterday awarded a verdict for $10,000 in the Supreme Court in his suit against the Brooklyn Heights Railroad Company for the loss of his right leg. He was crossing Myrtle Avenue when he was run over by a car of the defendant company.

The East River Terminal Railroad Company has asked permission of the Public Service Commission to build and operate a freight shifting railroad on dock property in Williamsburg. The proposed road is to extend from Kent Avenue and North Fourth Street to Wythe Avenue, near North Third Street.

Owing to lack of funds the Fourteenth Regiment will not go to the State Camp this Summer. Orders to that effect have been received from the Adjutant General's office in Albany. There is disappointment in the Fourteenth, as the regiment had expected to be designated to go to camp.

Albert Rafits, 22 years old, a tailor, committed suicide yesterday afternoon at his home, 1,553 Bergen Street, by inhaling illuminating gas. His wife said he had had no business or other troubles and she could not account for his act.

Announcement was made yesterday afternoon that the cornerstone ceremony and the blessing of the new Brooklyn College of the Jesuit Fathers will take place on the afternoon of May 24. The college is being erected on Crown Heights, at Nostrand Avenue and Carroll Street.

THE SOUTH'S WASTED PATRIMONY.

At the moment when the waste of our National resources is under discussion it is pertinent to inquire why the Democracy of the South persists in squandering its heritage. Why should it obstinately turn its back upon the path that invites its chief men to preferment and places of honor in the public service? Why should it turn its feet toward the barren wastes?

It is a singular situation. The colored Republicans of the South send delegates to National Conventions, where their votes are solicited and obtained for candidates to whose election they can contribute not one Electoral vote. In the last twelve years the Democrats of the South, through their delegates, have twice aided in putting forward a Presidential nominee who, even with the solid Electoral vote of the South which they were able to give, could not possibly be elected. Counting Delaware and Missouri, the South has 147 votes in the Electoral College. They are all practically assured to the candidate of the party this year. But what are Electoral votes worth when cast for a candidate certain of defeat? Then why should the delegates from the Southern States lend their strength in the Convention to WILLIAM J. BRYAN? Without them he will not be, he cannot be, nominated. Is it sane politics for these States to use the delegate vote in such a way as to annul the Electoral vote? Is it worth nothing to the Democrats of the South to have a Democratic President in the White House? Are they really content that their statesmen shall be excluded from the Federal bench, the Executive Cabinet, the Diplomatic Service, and from all posts of honor in the gift of the Administration?

We need not go back far in our history to learn what it actually does mean to the Democracy of the Southern States to have a Democratic President. Here is a list of prominent men of the South, well remembered names all, appointed to office in three branches of the service by President GROVER CLEVELAND, with the dates of their appointment:

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS ON THE SUPREME BENCH.

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Miss., 1888.
HOWELL E. JACKSON, Tenn., 1893.
EDWARD D. WHITE, La., 1893.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS IN THE CABINET.

THOS. F. BAYARD, Del., Sec. State, 1885.
JOHN G. CARLISLE, Ky., Sec. Treas., 1893.
L. Q. C. LAMAR, Miss., Sec. Interior, 1885.
HOKE SMITH, Ga., Sec. Interior, 1893.
DAVID R. FRANCIS, Mo., Sec. Interior, 1896.
HILARY A. HERBERT, Ala., Sec. Navy, 1893.
ARTHUR H. GARLAND, Ark., Atty. Gen., 1885.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS SENT AS MINISTERS ABROAD.

CLIFTON R. BRECKINRIDGE, Ark., Russia, 1894.
THOS. F. BAYARD, Del., England, 1893.
A. M. KIELY, Va., Austria, 1885.
A. R. LAWTON, Ga., Austria, 1887.
ROBERT MCLANE, Md., France, 1885.
JAMES B. EUSTIS, La., France, 1893.
J. S. M. CURRY, Va., Spain, 1885.
HANNIS TAYLOR, Ala., Spain, 1893.

Besides these, WILLIAM L. WILSON of West Virginia, a Southern Democrat by birth and association, was appointed Postmaster General in 1895. It may be said that the expectation of office is not the noblest motive of political action. But a party policy that does not contemplate the raising of the leading men of the party to places of honor and influence is senseless and without any reason for existence. So long as Democrats, not only of the South, but of the whole country, are excluded from the higher public service by adherence to the habit of nominating WILLIAM J. BRYAN, the party must fail to impress itself upon the National policy. Parties wither away when the distinctions and the honors of public life are put beyond the reach of their men of character, ability, and ambition. The hope of such distinctions is a stimulus, not merely to party zeal and loyalty, but to individual effort and development. It produces great men. In times past the South contributed its full share, and more, to the list of great names that adorn the pages of our history. There are in the South to-day Democrats with brains and character amply qualified to do distinguished service to the State and to make their names illustrious. Where are they? Not in politics. Certainly not in public office. Wearied and hopeless, they have turned their abilities to strictly private accounts, and apathy rules where once every State was astir with political life.

Once more this year opportunity invites the Democrats of the South. Will they by instructions to their delegates to Denver choose the path that holds out good promise of their restoration to their ancient heritage? Or will they blindly persist in action that closes every avenue to ambition and condemns their best men to exclusion from honors and rewards?

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE.

The conference at the White House on the conservation of our natural resources will be memorable for the personnel of the company. Besides a President of the United States who is destined to be remembered in history as one of his country's most vigorous, original, and purposeful citizens and a Chief Magistrate of certain exceptional qualities; the Vice President, and the members of the Cabinet, excepting Secretary TAFT, there were the forty-four State Governors, including men of such strength of character and noteworthy achievement as FOLK of Missouri, JOHNSON of Minnesota, GLENN of North Carolina, BROOKS of Wyoming, DINEEN of Illinois, and HUGHES of New York.

JAMES J. HILL, a builder of railroads and founder of great enterprises, who proved himself a logical and eloquent speaker on a subject that cannot be hastily "read up" in the cyclopedias; ANDREW CARNEGIE, WILLIAM J. BRYAN, the most distinguished perpetual candidate for the Presidency, and his latest favorite candidate for the Vice Presidency, JOHN MITCHELL, and JOHN HAYS HAMMOND, a mining engineer who is supposed to be paid the largest salary of any hired man in the world, were among the participants in the conference. Among the specialists of science and industry who contributed their share to the discussions were Dr. VAN HEISE, an authority on mining; ex-Senator CAREY of Wyoming, a student of the involved subject of land tenure, and President JASTRO of the American Live Stock Association.

The reports of the proceedings show that every member of the conference was alert to the lasting importance of its discussions, and had gone to Washington in the right temper and spirit. The boundless enthusiasm of the President inspired them all. It was a noteworthy assembly of men of brains and purpose, and the country may well be proud of it.

CANADA AND ENGLAND.

The cordial feeling toward the English connection that was expressed at the Canadian dinner on Thursday is not at all surprising. The only reason for surprise is that the expression of that feeling should have seemed especially pertinent on the occasion. The time has long gone by when serious causes of dissension existed. Canada is to-day practically as independent of the United Kingdom as the Kingdom is of Canada, so far as concerns the internal affairs of each. As to foreign relations it may be said that Canada has its own way as a matter of course save in matters directly affecting the interests of the Empire. The cases where the interests of the Empire and those of Canada really differ are few. Subordination as to these is a small price to pay for the benefits Canada derives from the connection, and especially for the complete security from all probable foreign complications enjoyed by the Dominion. The form the relations of the mother and daughter have taken assures a noble future to the latter, and in that the people of the United States can feel only sincere gratification.

GERMAN SCHOOLS.

Nothing shows more strikingly the difference in the economic habits of the United States and of Germany than the statistics of the pay of teachers in the public schools. Our Consul at Kehl sends to our Government the figures for the City of Strasburg, which he regards as fairly typical of the entire country, the salaries certainly being no lower than elsewhere in Germany. The authorities have there established a new schedule of pay, with advances of from 2 to 10 per cent. Under this schedule men teachers in the elementary schools receive from $342.72 up to $890.12, and the women teachers from $333.20 to $666.40, according to the length of service, the highest pay coming after twenty-nine years of service. In the secondary schools, corresponding roughly to our high schools, the women receive $71.40 and the men $95 a year in addition to the rates in the elementary schools. This brings the maximum pay of women to $737.80, and that of men to $985, after twenty-nine years of service. It will be seen that the veteran woman teacher in Germany is paid about the same as the teacher in this city after three years' experience.

Despite what appear to be low salaries, the profession of teaching attracts increasing numbers, who are subjected to severe tests at every stage of promotion. In the five years preceding 1906 the number of men teachers increased 10.6 per cent., and the number of women teachers 30.5, while the number of pupils increased only 9.1 per cent. The total number of schools in the latter year was 61,198, and the attendance was 9,779,356. This was 94 per cent. of the total of children in Germany of school age, leaving only 6 per cent. for the private schools, and, apparently, none at all without instruction. When we take into account the fact that a very large proportion of the instruction given at public expense in the German schools is devoted to industrial training, it is easy to understand the great and solid progress the nation has made in material prosperity, in manufactures, and in commerce.

A FULL DAY.

Thursday, May 14, 1908, was a noteworthy day in the history of human intelligence and achievement. An aeroplane flew eight miles under perfect guidance; a Los Angeles scientist made known his plans for improving on nature with the human race as LUTHER BURBANK does with plants; a Scotch astronomer discovered that Jupiter had captured a comet and put it to work as a satellite; the news came that in Olympia, near the great altar of the Greek Zeus, proofs had been found of human habitation 500 years before wandering Israel encamped on the Jordan; four ounces of a Brooklyn man's brain were removed and he survived with the ordinary intelligence of his neighborhood; a Michigan professor uttered, before an Episcopal congress, some "historic doubts" of the foundation of Christianity which were surely never put in words before the third century of our era, and EUGENE V. DEBS was nominated for the third time as the Socialists' candidate for the Presidency.

It was a good, full day, and an encouraging one for folks who, in spite of the many boasts of modern enlightenment, feel that the world's sum of knowledge and wisdom does not increase as rapidly as it should.

"BEETHOVEN" BY LAURENS.

The painting called "Beethoven," by JEAN PAUL LAURENS, is one of the most striking works in the Paris Salon this Spring. It is a curious composition of some allegorical significance which one may discover for himself or leave unexplained, which is often the best way with allegories and symbolical works. Who was ever quite satisfied with any elucidation of the mysteries of "Wilhelm Meister" or "Faust" or "Peer Gynt"?

At the base of a heroic statue of the composer, seated, in deep thought, and crowned with laurel, an orchestra and chorus (presumably of the Theater am der Wien in 1824) are performing the choral symphony, the Ninth. An alert imagination may find symbols of the other symphonies of that immortal nine in the groups of floating figures surrounding the statue. The pastoral, the battle symphony, the "Eroica," are surely there, but probably other works than the symphonies are symbolized, and perhaps the painter himself would hesitate to explain his picture. The hero of the "Eroica" rides through the clouds wildly over a group of women; the Church, personified by nuns and mitred prelates, is pictured as the background of the figures of the crucified Christ in MARY'S arms.

It may not be the highest form of modern art, but it is a picture worth knowing and studying. It will be handsomely reproduced in the Pictorial Section of THE SUNDAY TIMES.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Miners Must Take the Pledge!

Were it not for the fact that so many railways and other large corporations doing work that requires full command of mind and muscle as the first condition of safety have already demanded abstinence from intoxicants on the part of their employés under penalty of discharge, the news that the Frick Coke Company is about to enforce the same rule on its coal miners would be startling indeed to anybody familiar with the region affected. Even with this preparation, it is hard to realize that anybody seriously contemplates the immediate and complete abolition of the drink habit among a population on which it had a hold so strong—a population which, especially as regards its huge foreign element, can hardly be thought of as devoting its holidays and other leisure to any other amusement than that of getting drunk.

The reasons given for taking this "extreme measure" and "radical action," as the dispatches well call it, are excellent and adequate. The company's Superintendents and other officials have agreed that many of the recent mining disasters were due to carelessness or incompetency caused by drink, and, as explosions are ruinously expensive, temperance is the word hereafter, and the man who cannot stop drinking to excess must earn his living elsewhere than in the coal mines.

We have, we think, heard other explanations for mine explosions than the drunkenness of the miners, and there are painful rumors that from a good deal of the liquor sold in that region the operating companies used to draw an open, and some of them still draw a concealed, profit. Those things, however, are beside the point that the safety of the mines will be increased by sobriety among the miners, and that the Frick Company is only following a most commendable and encouraging tendency of the times in discriminating sternly against the drunkard as an economic unit of small value at best and as a menace to the lives of all around him at worst.

This movement, carried far enough, would do more than the most rigid statutory prohibition to settle the liquor problem, and would do it faster and in a better way, for it would not excite a single protest against the infringement of personal liberty. There is no business nowadays in which the drunkard is more than reluctantly tolerated till his place can be filled by a safer man, and the number of those in which he will not be tolerated at all is already large and is rapidly growing larger. With temperance when off as well as when on duty made the condition of employment in the coal mines, it would seem as though the time for drawing the line everywhere else were close at hand. That will not necessarily mean the end of the saloon, but it will make that institution a very different one from what it is now.

Accidents Count for Little.

Frequently as we have expressed impatience with the policy of secrecy and silence so firmly maintained by the WRIGHT brothers, we are ready to acknowledge that even the little yet really known about their latest achievements is enough to show that they have accomplished wonders—certainly as much as their nearest competitors and probably a good deal more.

The fact that the trials in North Carolina ended in a tumble and a smash is of trivial importance, since neither of the aeronauts was hurt. The accident was only one of many similar lessons by which alone the enormously difficult art of flight can ever be learned. It must be remembered that were a practicable flying machine now in existence—a machine, that is, by means of which a skilled and experienced man could navigate the air for hours at great speed and in reasonable safety—there are not yet any such men. Neither the WRIGHTS nor any of the two or three Frenchmen who are in their class have had real practice in the use of their huge and fragile pinions for as much as a single hour, counting their trials all as one. Therefore, though they have advanced further than any other pupils of the birds, they are still spelling out their primer and there is nothing surprising or discouraging in frequent stumbles, followed by going back to begin again.

One controlled and guided flight of eight miles amounts, with all due respect to the eminent Prof. NEWCOMB, to more than all the drifting that ever was done in balloons, and to more, judging from all present indications, than ever will be done with them. The professor is doubtless right when he figures out that with materials and motors now known, aeroplanes can never be made large enough to play any important rôle in the transportation of either freight or passengers as a part of ordinary business,—but the dominion of the air, even for single men, and they specially trained athletes, will be an enormous increase of human potentialities.

One fact reported from that place of prophetic name, Kill Devil, deserves especial notice. While one of the brothers was in full flight and as high in air as they have yet ventured, his motor stopped, but the machine, instead of dropping straight to the ground with a crash, sailed slowly down, and made a safe and fairly graceful landing. That proved that the gas bag is not necessary, even in case of accident to the engine, and so the balloon was bereft of its one point of supposed superiority.

Good Scheme but a Bad Place.

What seemed to be most excellent reasons for not establishing a naval training station on the site of the Jamestown Exposition were reprinted from The Medical Record on this page yesterday. That men under the discipline of regular soldiers can pass the Summer there without much serious sickness was demonstrated during the progress of the fair, but the experience was far from a comfortable one for the soldiers or for the army surgeons who watched and guarded them with anxious vigilance and did more than sigh with relief when the order to desert Camp John Smith came at last.

On The Medical Record's showing, the place apparently has not one qualification for being a training station, unless the fact that somebody wants to sell the land to the Government for a good deal more than it is worth counts as a qualification.

Saved with Installments.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"The proof of the pudding is the eating of it."

Three years ago I bought a house in Brooklyn. Price $5,000, on which we paid $1,000, leaving a mortgage of $4,000. We had lived in it for three years previously, for which we paid $500 per year rent.

My family and I figure as follows:

Interest at 5% on $4,000 for three years	$600
Taxes, three years	185
Insurance, three years	18
Water	30
Repairs, making our house as good as it was three years ago	150
Total	$983

If rented we would have paid $1,500, and only a bundle of rent receipts to show. As it is we have paid as above $983, in addition to which our first payment of $1,000 would have earned $50 interest, so that we figure we are gainers by nearly $500. A. W. W.

Brooklyn, N. Y., May 14, 1908.

High Rents.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a practical engineer, and a man having had several years' experience in building construction, let me say that the prime cause for high rents lies in the fact: First—That we people in New York City are fools enough to pay for it, and have not got backbone enough to stand up for our rights. Second—That the cheap and dangerous class of building construction in the initial work necessitates an endless amount of repairs, which must of necessity occur, which is bound in a very short time to eat up all of the profits derived from the property, and in order to make ends meet the people who occupy the premises are obliged to pay the high rent in order that the owner of the property may meet his running expenses. H. M. ROOT.

New York, May 15, 1908.

Isolating Consumptives.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The castigation of "Costigan" by "A. K." is wholly unwarranted, because it does not answer the argument and is simply vituperation.

I have had three brothers victims of this dreadful disease, and if the suggestion of Mr. Costigan had been followed—that is if the first one had been isolated—I do not believe the others would have fallen victims.

I hope the Health Department will consider isolation, for I agree that this is the only course to pursue to prevent its dreadful havoc. BERTHA JENKINS.

New York, May 15, 1908.

Eclipsed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Where are we at?

It used to be "Tables reserved for ladies."

To-day I saw a sign in a restaurant window: "Tables reserved for men, in the rear!" Help! Help! J. B. CONOVER.

SELF-CONGRATULATION.

A woman's dowry of complacent will
Was not my heritage at birth;
A curious longing for the greater worth
Of man's estate made all my pulses thrill.
The blessed freedom of untrammeled will,
The right to conquer and invade all earth,
Not formed was I for thing of scorn or mirth,
Man's hour of worse than idleness to fill!
Yet all the stars stood silent as I spake,
And from the earth the very stones cried out—
"What! Woman, from her apathy awake,
Will put man's power and mastery to rout?"
And so I said no more, but strove to weave
My web alone—and laughed—but up my sleeve!

JAPAN ABSORBING KOREA, HE SAYS

Mr. Hulbert Contradicts Prof. Ladd's Assertions, That All Is Well.

SPOILS, NO REDRESS

Has Witnesses That Japan Is Entering Goods Duty Free in Violation of Her Treaty.

Homer B. Hulbert, editor of The Korea Review, has sent to THE TIMES a letter challenging Prof. George Trumbull Ladd's statements in these columns concernnig the firm of Collbran & Bostwick in Söul and the Japanese occupation of Korea as follows:

New York, May 14, 1908.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I saw in your issue of the 13th inst. a letter by Prof. G. T. Ladd, in which he takes Mr. Millard to task for telling some of the supposed reasons for Mr. W. D. Stevens's visit to America, a visit which ended so sadly and tragically in San Francisco. As Mr. Millard simply stated what were believed to be some of the causes of that visit I fail to see why Prof. Ladd should call it "cruelly unkind." No one who has had an opportunity to study Japan's methods in the Orient continuously and at close hand can fail to see that at every point in her dealings with Korea she has followed up each act of usurpation by another, paving the way for each by the most solemn pledges and assurances that she contemplates no further encroachments. Japan allows her small traders and peddlers to go about the streets of Canton and invite attack in order to secure a casus belli against China. So it has always been in Korea. Japan has herself made the occasions for her several acts of usurpation.

Prof. Ladd says that Prince Ito has proclaimed Japan's intention not to annex Korea. Does he mean to tell us that that settles the matter? At least four separate times Japan has made just as solemn assertions, and each time she has found means to break her word. The strange thing is that Prof. Ladd imagines he can make the people of this country believe that Japan does not intend to absorb Korea. He has charged the critics of Japan with all sorts of misrepresentation and falsification, but it is worth while to ask what opportunities Prof. Ladd has had for finding out the facts. He says in his recent book, "The views of the old resident, (whether missionary, diplomat, or business man,) as such, are of little or no value. Especially is this true of Korea," and yet it was from the old residents in Korea that he professes to have learned the facts that fill his book. For instance, he quotes pages from my works on Korea wherever I criticise the evils of the old Korean régime, adducing this as authentic, but condemns as utterly untrustworthy what I say about the evils of the Japanese régime. In one part of his book he uses me to prove his point, and in another place he says that my "History of Korea" is mostly lies. It took fifteen years of research to compile that "History of Korea," and there is to-day no other foreigner who has ever gone through those original documents or is in a position to pass judgment upon my history. It contains, without doubt, some inaccuracies, as all pioneer work will, but for a man of Prof. Ladd's standing and reputation to characterize the work of another man in such gross terms without himself knowing anything about the subject is at least surprising. It is, however, the method in which he handles all those who have attempted to compel the Japanese by publicity to give Korea something like justice.

In that letter Prof. Ladd says that Mr. Millard's claim that the Japanese secured the removal of J. McLeavy Brown from the Customs Service is false. It was common knowledge, and the Japanese never denied it. I had a long conversation with Dr. Brown just after it occurred, and he had no doubt whatever that the Japanese had secured his removal. Moreover, Dr. Brown told me that the Japanese authorities tried to get him to accept a large sum of money as a solatium, but that he refused it on the ground that the money would be taken out of the Korean treasury and that the Japanese had no right to take Korean funds for such a purpose.

As for Prof. Ladd's charges against the American firm of Collbran & Bostwick in Söul, they must not be allowed to go unchallenged. That firm built the first railway in Japan, built an electric tramway in Söul before there was one in Japan, took the lead in industrial progress, taught hundreds of Koreans an honorable and useful trade, and gave an object lesson of untold value to the people of Korea. They are now the agents of a great British company which is building a system of water works for Söul. They are a business firm, and when the Korean Government and the ex-Emperor failed to live up to their written obligations, this firm proceeded according to recognized business methods. The business had to be transacted through the legal channel of the United States Legation, and if Prof. Ladd's charges are true, it is the American Government that is responsible. Does any one believe that our present administration would countenance any such trickery?

I hardly think that Prof. Ladd's method of attacking individuals who have criticised Japan's régime will commend itself to the American people. For instance, he makes the direct statement that I received from the Emperor of Korea $40,000 to undertake some enterprise for him. I declare that statement to be unqualifiedly false. I have never received from the Emperor in any capacity, whether that of personal friend and adviser or of emissary to any other country, more than the money required for covering the necessary expenses of the work. My connection with him never began to compensate me for the financial sacrifices which I have made in acting as the advocate of a nation which to-day is suffering untold and unmerited suffering from the Japanese.

On the other hand, in his book Dr. Ladd tells us that when Marquis Ito thanked him for coming to Korea and helping him he answered that he felt fully repaid by the consciousness of having been of service. I challenge Prof. Ladd to state publicly whether he received any money from the Japanese. The plain implication of his book is that he did not, but I challenge him to answer the question openly, yes or no.

As for the distressing fate that overtook Mr. Stevens in San Francisco it was a matter of sincere regret to me, and I made a clear statement of my views about it in The Springfield Republican. It was wholly reprehensible on the part of the Koreans. I had been on the Pacific Coast only last November, and had advised the Koreans everywhere not to resort to force. Many had asked my advice as to whether they should go back to Korea and fight. In every case I advised them to stay here and fit themselves by education for some future time when they might be of service to their country. I know nothing about the reasons for Mr. Stevens's visit to America, but his statement that all was well in that land has been disproved a dozen times over by events that are daily transpiring there. I once tested the genuineness of his desire to see Koreans get justice. I had in my hands scores of cases of brutal wrong that had come from various parts of the country. I sent to Mr. Stevens and said that if Marquis Ito would indicate some office in Söul where I could, without the least publicity, bring these cases and secure simply a hearing, I would entirely cease my campaign of publicity against the Japanese régime. The offer was contemptuously declined. During two years' fight to get recognition of the wrongs of individual Koreans I never knew of a single case in which a Korean secured even a hearing without the intervention of a foreigner. If I had space I could tell a story of wrongs and cruelties that would make the blood of Americans boil with indignation. Japan has some powerful men working for her, but the facts cannot permanently be concealed. I have recently received a statement from Dr. MacKay, the Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Missions of Canada. He has recently been through Korea. He went as a strong man and avowed believer in Japan. He sends me the following statement to use as I wish:

> The grosser forms of Leopold's atrocities on the Congo may be lacking in Korea, but the spirit of the two things is identical. It is spoliation from one end of the land to the other, without hope of redress. I protest with all the power at my command against a form of atrocity that savors more of the Middle Ages than of the twentieth century.

He saw what was actually done, rather than simply listen to what the Japanese said was being done. I am prepared to lay before any man or any body of men the proofs of what I say. Prof. Ladd says Japan is giving equal opportunities for American enterprise in Korea. I can produce American witnesses here who can, and I believe would, declare under oath that to their own specific knowledge Japan is putting her goods into Korea duty free in direct violation of her treaty obligations. Is any one willing to put this to the test? Do the apologists of Japan dare to come right down to specific facts? I am at the service of any one whom honor and love of fair play and devotion to the claims of humanity may impel to action. Our side is the one which invites, nay demands, investigation.

GALLERY NOTES.

Etchings by American Artists at the Keppel Galleries.

An exhibition of selected etchings by American artists at the Keppel Galleries, 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, shows how great a variety of work has been done in this medium by "painter etchers," as they are called—etchers, that is, who make their original pictures on the copper instead of reproducing pictures executed first in another medium. The collection can perhaps hardly be called representative, lacking examples by such important artists as Miss Mary Cassatt, J. Alden Weir, Robert F. Blum, and such clever moderns as John Sloan and C. F. W. Mielatz. But the work that is shown is all of it important on the technical as well as on the artistic side. There are some admirable Venice subjects by Otto Bacher, in which complicated patterns formed by the tangle of boats and buildings and bridges are reduced by the artist's sense for reasonable and effective selection to a wonderful appearance of simplicity. There are some graceful little fantasies by F. S. Church, and one subject called "Silence," in which a rose touches the lips of a mummy's head, that shows strong imaginative feeling in treatment as well as in conception.

Donald Shaw MacLaughlan's dignified and spacious art is quite fully represented, and Joseph Pennell's very different method of expresssion is seen in vivid contrast with it. Among the landscape subjects those of Peter Moran are preeminent. The variety and interest of rural pasture lands and Summer grainfields are rendered with extraordinary spirit, and one easily understands the ardent appreciation of Jules Breton for an American who could so successfully express the mild drama of farm life. The gifted amateur, Dr. Leroy Milton Yale, who died not long ago, is rightly put among the authoritative masters of the medium; George Senseney's impression in color of designs executed in etching and aquatint are shown, and so is Robert J. Wickenden's remarkable "La Mère Penneçaye," a lithograph of a French peasant woman 89 years old, drawn with the tenderest feeling for the beauty of age and with a firm yet sensitive technique. Whistler, of course, is not omitted.

At the Brandus Galleries, 391 Fifth Avenue, is a collection of original etchings in color by members of the modern French school. In November, 1904, an exhibition called the "First Annual Salon of Colored Etchings" was opened in the Georges Petit Galleries in Paris to introduce this very interesting form of art to the public, and the present exhibition is the "First New York Salon" of colored etchings to be held by the Société Georges Petit. Much of the work is very strong and full of the artist's individuality. Raffaelli, in particular; Thaulow, and the wonderful Osterlind succeed in making the medium render brilliant pictorial effects without in the slightest degree overstepping its legitimate limitations. Other artists represented are Paul Helleu, Henri Jourdain, Alphonse Laffitte, and Manuel Robbé. It is a bit difficult, even now after the acceptance of the color etching by museums and collectors as a work of pure art, to make the general public understand that it is such. The artist not only etches his plate with his own original design, but as a rule he himself does the coloring and printing, and no mechanical process comes into the making of the picture.

WANT CLEANER STREETS.

Retail Dry Goods Association Urges Public to Observe Sanitary Code.

At the request of Commissioner Foster Crowell of the Department of Street Cleaning the Retail Dry Goods Association has been considering the advantage that would result from the co-operation of the public in an effort to keep the streets in a cleaner condition. At a recent meeting of the Directors these resultant resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The people residing in many parts of New York are unmindful of the importance of not throwing any paper, rubbish, or other litter into the streets, and

Whereas, Careless practices in this regard cause the streets to appear neglected and unsightly, especially on Sundays and holidays, notwithstanding and in spite of the efforts of the Street Cleaning Department, and

Whereas, Clean streets not only improve the sanitary condition but add greatly to the attractiveness of our city, therefore be it

Resolved, That this association hereby urges upon all its members a strict observance of the ordinances and the Sanitary Code, which forbid the casting of any litter upon the sidewalk or upon the pavement in the middle of the streets. And be it further

Resolved, That the members be urgently requested to provide and use proper means for packing and baling all rubbish and fragments for proper removal by the Street Cleaning Department in the manner prescribed by law, and that the influence of this association be exerted in every possible direction to bring about the improvement in the streets which will be the result of adhering to the above regulations.

The movement is expected to meet with popular approval.

Penny Fountain for City Hall Park.

At the request of the Women's Municipal League, Park Commissioner Smith has issued a permit for the erection in City Hall Park of an automatic fountain, at which cold carbonated water may be obtained for a cent a glass. The fountain will pay a rental to the city, and if it proves a success others will be set up in the parks.

MUST CUT WAGES OR RAISE RATES

Vice President Brown of the New York Central States Alternative to Shippers.

ROADS' EXTRA BURDENS

Reduction Would Affect 1,500,000 Men —Says That the Business Men Absolutely Control the Situation.

CHICAGO, May 15.—Delegates from fifty commercial and shippers' associations of the East and Middle West met in conference here to-day to discuss means of preventing Eastern railroads from carrying into effect a proposed increase in freight rates.

The conference was held under the auspices of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. It is expected by the promoters of the meeting that the result will be the starting of a movement to further pending National legislation which will make it impossible for inter-State railroads to increase rates without the consent of the Inter-State Commerce Commission.

The harmonious spirit of the conference was somewhat ruffled when Irving T. Bush of the Merchants' Association of New York introduced a resolution calling for a postponement of action against the railroads until a hearing of their side of the case could be had. It was referred to the Committee on Resolutions.

The principal address was delivered by Frederick W. Upham, President of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Upham called attention to the fact that while the railroads are contemplating increasing their freight rates, they are at the same time reducing their gross expenses.

A break in the regular programme was occasioned by the unexpected appearance at the conference of W. C. Brown, senior Vice President of the New York Central lines, who asked permission to make a statement setting forth the railroads' side of the proposition.

Mr. Brown said: "I do not think any definite percentage of increase has been considered, much less determined upon. That some increase must be made is, in my opinion, inevitable.

"In the last eighteen months the payrolls of the railroads of the United States have been increased by increased wages approximately $100,000,000 per annum.

"Legislation restricting the hours of labor of trainmen, enginemen, operators, signalmen, &c., has added approximately $25,000,000 annually to this amount.

"By legislation passed by the last Congress reducing compensation paid railroads for handling United States mail something like $10,500,000 per annum has been taken from the revenues of the railroads, and within the last thirty days the Employers' Liability act has removed the last vestige of protection against personal injury claims on the part of employes.

"The only possible manner in which this burden can be placed where it belongs, 'upon the whole community,' is by an increase in rates by the carriers commensurate with the new burden imposed.

"The rate from Clinton and Keokuk to New York, about 1,200 miles, on butter and eggs, is 84½ cents per 100 pounds, while on dressed poultry the rate is 96½ cents per 100 pounds.

"An increase of 10 per cent. on butter and eggs would make an increase of a little more than eight-tenths of a mill per pound; while on dressed poultry the increase would be a little more than nine-tenths of a mill per pound.

"The issue is in the hands of the business men of the country. If the business interests of the Nation shall, after mature consideration, say that railroad rates shall not be advanced, I doubt if it can be done, but it should be understood clearly, definitely, and beyond all question of doubt that in saying this they say just as clearly and definitely that the wages of the great army of 1,500,000 railroad employes shall be reduced and must accept their full measure of responsibility for the results which will follow."

CLINTON'S BODY COMING HERE

Mayor Names a Committee of Citizens to Receive It on May 27.

The remains of George Clinton, first Governor of the State of New York, a Brigadier General in the Colonial Army and twice Vice President of the United States, will be exhumed on Wednesday, May 27, at Washington, where they were buried in 1812. They will reach Jersey City that night.

The following day they will be transported to the Battery in the revenue cutter Mohawk, and will remain in this city for twenty-four hours. On Friday, May 29, the body will be taken to Kingston, N. Y., for final burial.

The Mayor has summoned the following committee to meet on Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock in his office in the City Hall to make fitting arrangements for the reception of the remains of the distinguished statesman:

Willard Parsons Memorial Fund.

Friends of the late Rev. Willard Parsons have started a movement to erect one or two tablets to his memory and to create a fund the income from which shall be used to continue the work of sending poor city children on vacations into the country, in which work Dr. Parsons was a pioneer. The average cost for each child for two weeks of country life is $3, and it is hoped that $30,000 may be raised, the income from which will provide for 500 children annually. Contributions may be addressed to the Rev. John Bancroft Devins, 156 Fifth Avenue.

BOYS' CONVENTION STRONG FOR HUGHES

And There Was Noise Enough to Make It Sound Like the Real Thing.

HEARST WAS AN ALSO RAN

Johnson Pretty Popular—Some Rumors of a Bolt to Dark Horse Roosevelt Proved Unfounded.

The students of the Brooklyn Boys' High School got several weeks ahead of both Chicago and Denver last night by holding a joint Democratic-Republican National Convention in the High School Assembly Room, which resulted in the nomination of Hughes.

If it wasn't absolutely the real thing it looked like it, and sounded more so. Each delegation rallied around a red, white, and blue barber pole bearing the name of the delegations chosen in the State in large letters, and limbered up its voice by a few preliminary cheers, while a brass band helped some. At the beginning there were four regular candidates—Taft, Hughes, Bryan, Johnson—with Hearst on an independent ticket. There were also dark rumors of a grand bolt to Roosevelt.

By the time some 900 delegates had assembled, the promiscuous yelling had become deafening, but it wasn't a circumstance to the unanimous "tiger" which greeted the appearance of Ernest C. Smith of the history department, sponsor for the convention, who escorted the temporary Chairman, John Swan, to the platform. Though somewhat uncertain as to the spelling, the students agree that the prevailing sentiment was Boom—gig—a—boom!

Boom—gig—a—boom!
Boom, get a rat-trap
Bigger'n a cat-trap,
Boom—Boom—Boom!
Cannibal—Cannibal!
Sis—boom—ah!
High School! High School!
Rah—Rah—Rah!
Smith!

With great assistance from the drum on every boom.

Temporary Chairman Swan, however, called the meeting to order with a few mighty strokes of the gavel, and calmly asked for the report of the Committee on Rules. Here the signs of the first fight became visible, for when Chairman Mitchell announced the majority report as opposed to the unit rule, up jumped the opposition in the person of Mr. Sachs, the gentleman from New Hampshire. A motion for a ballot was vociferously laid upon the table.

There was a momentary lull while the Committee on Permanent Organization presented the regular Chairman, Arthur Brenner. Brenner is a small and quiet-looking chap, but is reputed to have inherited a strong bent for politics from his father Jacob, the right-hand man of Timothy L. Woodruff. Anyway, in spite of his size, young Brenner showed himself valiant with the gavel, for the unit rule motion was taken up from the table, and a hot scrimmage over it began. As Secretary Frank O'Reilly started on a roll call the pitched battle divided into some forty-odd skirmishes, as each delegation fought out the matter by itself.

Although Chairman Brenner did strong arm work pounding for order the Secretary was forced to make a megaphone of his hands and yell at the top of his lungs "Alabama." "Arkansas" came next, with a strong accent on the second syllable, but the speaker quickly followed it up by a second yell, "or say, there, better Arkansaw."

Politically speaking rather funny things happened, for the delegation from Republican Ohio went unanimously for the Democratic unit rule. It was when the platform came up, however, that the youthful politicians showed instinctive skill. The minority was trying to knock planks out of the majority platform, which demanded tariff reform, Chinese exclusion, the employer's liability law, the election of United States Senators direct by the people, the income tax, and the adoption of the metric system.

The "noes" raised a pretty good loud cry, but the majority had apparently bribed the trombonist from the band, for he tooted in with the "ayes," with tremendous effect. He was temporarily squelched by Sergeant at Arms C. Francis Beatty, who clubbed the obstreperous musician dexterously across the head.

Then came the roll call for nominations. Alabama yielded to Colorado, and the gentleman from that State rose to the platform and nominated Taft, with much eloquent reference to "critical periods," Washington, Lincoln, McKinley, and Roosevelt in 1904. At this the band broke into a joyous "Glory, Hallelujah," but Howard Bergamini went on undisturbed and Taft was nominated with great acclaim.

Possibly the enthusiasm with which all motions were received is accounted for by the fact that no delegation felt itself restrained to cheer only for one side of any question. The most catholic in their laudations were the gentlemen from Utah, who cheered for every candidate with equal vigor, and open-mindedly aided both the "ayes" and "noes" on every vote.

Arkansas yielded to Oregon, which in the person of Henry Hennesy, nominated the person of Hoey Hennesy, nominated pressively. His references to the evil of gambling drew forth the loud acclaim of the cornet, and another musician was squelched by the Sergeant at Arms. Moynehan, the gentleman from Indiana, introduced his candidate Bryan, rather unfortunately, as "one known to you all as the vanquished candidate of two comparatively recent terms." Perhaps this accounts for the fact that Bryan polled only 120 votes in the convention.

New Jersey nominated Hearst as an independent reformer, "the idol of the great masses of the American people," who twice led his party to defeat. The eloquent peroration proclaimed Hearst as a "reformer and an anti-vivisectionist," but in spite of this Hearst came out decidedly as an "also ran," carrying less than 100 votes.

When Calahan, the gentleman from Illinois, proclaimed Johnson as "the grandson of a Scandinavian peasant, the son of a blacksmith who died in the poorhouse, and himself a grocer boy," a voice from the gallery called "Is dat so?" but Calahan never blinked and went on to assure the audience that in Johnson were united "the integrity of Washington, the tact of Lincoln, and the executive ability of McKinley."

All the nominations were regularly seconded, and the matter put to vote. The Democratic-Republican Convention of the Boys' High School students of Brooklyn then nominated Hughes by a vote of 512. His nearest competitor was Johnson, with 204. Then all party feeling was lost, and the convention, headed by the band, triumphantly marched out into the street. After midnight the convention was still parading with unquenched ardor, though the band was becoming slightly exhausted and the neighborhood aroused.

MANY AT WHIPPANY BALL.

Dancers Attend from New York and Tuxedo—Dr. Ward Entertains.

The Whippany River Clubhouse at Morristown was gay last night with decorations of lilacs and apple blossoms for the ball given there by the governors of the club. Some 300 invitations had been sent oua, and many guests went from New York, Tuxedo, Bernardsville, and the Oranges.

Dr. Leslie D. Ward gave a dinner of more than eighty covers at the club preceding the dance. Mrs. Benjamin Nicoll, wife of the club's President; Mrs. Gustave Kissel, Mrs. Richard H. Williams, Jr., Mrs. George E. S. Dadmun, and Mrs. Herbert E. Ward were the patronesses who received the guests to the ball. After the dancing Delmonico served the midnight supper.

Among those invited were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, Mr. and Mrs. Robert D. Foote, Mr. and Mrs. Forrest F. Dryden, Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. McCurdy, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore D. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Nicoll, Mr. and Mrs. George E. S. Dadmun, Mr. and Mrs. William Shippen, Miss Morgan, the Misses Kane, the Misses Nellie Rogers, Mildred G. Townsend, Ina Kissel, Josephine Crosby, Rosamond Burr, the Misses Nicoll, the Misses Pyle, Cutler, Waterbury, and Whitney, Messrs. Douglas Campbell, Stuyvesant Fish, Jr., Chalmers Wood, Argyle Parsons, Chesley Richardson, Newton Rae, Gardner B. Perry, Tiffany Richardson, Gustave E. Kissel, John F. Talmage, Cecil St. George, Kenneth B. Schley, Theodore White, Gordon Forbes, Harry E. Hoy, George F. Baker, Cortlandt Nicoll, Thomas Dickinson, and W. B. Boulton, Jr.

BIDE-A-WEE GETS ITS FARM.

Waldorf Theatricals Raised Enough to Insure That—A New Playlet Given.

The balance of the $1,000 needed by the Bide-A-Wee Home to purchase a country home for its rescued animal waifs was raised yesterday by the theatricals given at the Waldorf-Astoria. The property is at Riverdale, N. J., and comprises ten acres of high ground sloping to the Hackensack River, and a house, stable, and outbuildings.

The entertainment included four one-act plays, notably Edward Fales Coward's "The Second Story Man," a clever vaudeville skit, presented for the first time. There were three characters; a crook, played by Hevlin Benson; a blackmailer, acted by Mr. Coward himself, and a lady, played by Mrs. William Newland Amory. The scene was laid in a drawing room. The playlet pleased the audience so well that it received many rounds of applause.

The other plays were Brander Matthews's "Frank Wylde," "Mrs. Hilary Regrets," and "A Game of Cards." Evert Jansen Wendell made his ninety-eighth appearance as the chevalier in the last.

Cecelia Loftus's imitations included Ethel Barrymore in "Sunday," Hattie Williams, Mme. Nazimova, and a very fine imitation of an Englishwoman boarding a car. The audience was large and enthusiastic.

Walker Marcus Bennett staged the plays. The patronesses, many of whom were present, included:

Mrs. James M. Bailey, Mrs. John Beekman, Mrs. Abbott Brown, Mrs. A. V. T. Billington, Mrs. Carroll Beckwith, Mrs. E. Mabel Clark, Mrs. Stephen Utley Cadwell, Mrs. Walter M. Dunk, Mrs. W. H. Flagg, Mrs. W. M. Fleitmann, Mrs. George H. Gould, Mrs. Ulysses Grant, Mrs. W. S. Hofstra, Mrs. Harry Ulysses Kibbe, Mrs. Maurice La Montague, Mrs. Frederick Neilson, Mrs. John H. Pell, Mrs. Paul E. Rasor, Mrs. F. H. Reed, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Winfield Scott, Mrs. Frank K. Sturgis, Mrs. Hans Winterfieldt, and Mrs. Edward Warton.

Mrs. Harry Ulysses Kibbe is the President of Bide-a-Wee Home. The Directors are Mrs. W. N. Amory, Miss Nathalie De Castro, Mrs. Ulysses S. Grant, Mrs. Edward Warton, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. W. S. Hofstra, and others.

AMERICANS AT COURT.

Brilliant Function Given by King Edward—Indian Potentate Is Present.

LONDON, May 15.—King Edward and Queen Alexandra held a brilliant Court in Buckingham Palace to-night. There was a large attendance, especially in the diplomatic circle, and unusual splendor was given the function through the presence of the Dewan of Nepal and a large Indian suite, whose robes were a perfect blaze of diamonds.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, wife of the American Ambassador, presented Miss Jenny Crocker of California, Mrs. H. P. Thompson of New York, Mrs. M. C. C. Ramsay of Virginia, Mrs. Cole Scott of Virginia, and Mrs. Henry Bacon, widow of the American artist.

It was noticeable that many of the gowns worn were a modified form of the Directoire style which recently created a sensation in Paris. Queen Alexandra wore a pale mauve crêpe de chine, embroidered with gold. Mrs. Reid's gown of blue was embroidered with diamonds, and she wore a magnificent tiara and other jewels.

WEDDING PLANS.

McConihe-Schneider Nuptials on June 8—A Westchester Marriage.

Miss Margaret Scott Schneider, whose marriage to Warren McConihe will take place in All Angels' Church on June 8, has chosen Miss Ilse Billings of Cincinnati as her maid of honor, and the Misses Gladys Radway, Elfride Brewer, Lelia Durant, Helen Hotchkiss, Gladys Peck, all of New York; Ella Lindley of Princeton, N. J.; Anna Glenny of Boston, and Tedesco Greenly of South Orange as bridesmaids.

Malcolm S. McConihe will be his brother's best man, and the ushers selected are Ralph S. Stubbs, W. Leland Thompson, Seymour Johnson, John Knickerbocker, A. Boynton Glidden, Lieut. Commander Frank W. Kellogg, U. S. N.; Karl Schneider, and Gustave Schneider, brothers of the bride.

The reception and dinner after the ceremony will be given at Delmonico's. Mr. McConihe and his bride will sail for Europe on June 20.

The marriage of George Webster Adams of Utica, N. Y., and Miss Ferris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ferris, will take place at noon on Saturday, May 23, at the home of the bride's parents, in Westchester. The Rev. Dr. Frank M. Clendenning of Westchester will perform the ceremony.

Miss Ferris's attendants will include Miss Emeline Munson of Utica, N. Y., who will be maid of honor; the Misses Edna Lee Munson of Utica, and Miss Marion Chappell of New London, who will be bridesmaids, and Miss Margaret Ferris, a sister of the bride, who will be flower girl. Frederick Wiggin of Litchfield, Conn., will be the best man. There will be no ushers. The reception will be held at the residence of the bride's parents.

Iowa-New Yorkers Install Officers.

The Iowa-New Yorkers, a new society in the club world, held its fourth and last meeting of the season yesterday at the Waldorf-Astoria to install its first officers. Two members of the society, and newly elected officers, represent their native State by their names, Mrs. Iowa Whitney, the Treasurer, and Mrs. Iowa Huntington, a member of the Board of Regents. Other officers installed yesterday were—President, Mrs. Anna Howard Clarkson; Vice Presidents, Mrs. Russell, Mrs. C. W. Alden, Mrs. Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, and Mrs. Witcher; Corresponding Secretary, Miss K. Spencer; Recording Secretary, Miss Hobern; Regents, Mrs. Thummel and Dr. Margaret Cleves. Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt is the Honorary President.

Honor Mrs. Story, State Regent, D. A. R.

The Knickerbocker Chapter, D. A. R., gave a reception yesterday to the new State Regent of the society, Mrs. William Cummings Story, in the State Apartments of the Waldorf-Astoria. There was also the annual installation of officers of the chapter, Mrs. Story as State Regent officiating. The officers, who were also on the Reception Committee for the day, are: Honorary Regent—Mrs. Frederick Hasbrouck; Regent—Mrs. William R. Stewart; First Vice Regent—Mrs. Charles Ellis Taft; Second Vice Regent—Mrs. Charles F. Terhune; Treasurer—Mrs. Curtis Brackett; Registrar—Miss Helen Fisher; Historian—Mrs. N. Taylor Phillips. There were a musical programme and refreshments.

St. John Smith's Bachelor Dinner.

St. John Smith, who is to marry Miss Florence Howland, in Grace Church, Amherst, Mass., on May 23, gave his bachelor dinner last night at the Union Club. His guests included his best man, J. Hopkins Smith, Jr., and the ushers, Langdon Parker Marvin, Henry McBurney, William Stackpole, Julian Parker Welsh, and Lawrence S. Butler, all of New York; Charles Jackson and Elliot Wadsworth of Boston, and Frederick Hale of Portland, Me. Other guests were William Woodward, Bayard Cutting, Herman Kinnicutt, and Stewart Walker.

BLAMES WOMEN FOR SERVANT PROBLEM

Miss Bruce Says They Lack Training and View Their Work Narrowly.

POINTS TO MEN AS MODELS

Their Culinary Arrangements on Trains Would Give Points to Many Women's Kitchens.

One of the causes of the servant problem here is that women have not had the training for household affairs that men have for business, and do not consider their work from a sufficiently broad point of view, so Miss Bella Bruce, teacher-student and teacher of domestic science, said in a talk yesterday morning at the Woman's Exchange.

"The woman owes her servants a definite and reasonable wage for a reasonable service, and also owes them a proper training," Miss Bruce said. "It is her duty to give them sufficient nourishing food and sleeping rooms which would not be considered impossible for other people. When the economic work is done and paid for, the right of the mistress ends. It is her privilege to suggest and guide her servants, but only when her counsel is willingly received.

"When a woman raises the wages in her household she raises the wages in all the houses in the neighborhood. When she takes an untrained servant at the same wages that she has paid to a competent servant, she raises the scale of wages and puts a premium on incompetency. When unskilled workers are drawn in the good servants are pushed out and the industrial balance is destroyed.

"The hope of the American domestic service question is in the children of the immigrants, but domestic work is looked down upon, and it must be raised. Teaching domestic science in the public schools is of the greatest importance. We have ignorance in the kitchen, but what can we expect when we have more ignorance in the drawing room? The present higher education of women is helpful to women who are going to lead strictly professional lives, but it does not help the woman in the home. The study of domestic science should take its position with the study of other sciences, no matter what position in life the student is to hold. In the modern household there is an enormous waste of force not only in expenditure but in results. The arrangements made and conducted by men in the culinary departments of railroad trains and ocean liners can give points for most kitchens in compactness and practical utility."

Miss Bruce said that in the conduct of their households the hearts of housekeepers sometimes ran away with their heads, and that by neglecting small matters for the comfort of the servants they sometimes lost competent workers.

She gave a number of "Don'ts" for the housewife.

"Don't give an order and then forget about it; don't send orders by other servants when it can be avoided; don't talk about servants at the table; don't leave money around as if you did not value it, and do not spy upon the servants; don't make a promise to a servant and take it back; don't go to the rooms of your servants unless you think they may not be clean; they have a right to some privacy; don't let the cook scant the servants' table; don't forget that for extra service there should be extra rest, and if you wish respectful service be respectful and self-contained yourself.

SCRANTON COLD TO CARUSO.

Spent All Its Money on the Elks and Had None Left for His Concert.

Enrico Caruso returned to New York yesterday afternoon from Scranton, Penn., instead of staying for the concert at the New Armory there last night. There was much surprise among his friends here at his reappearance, though it was expected that he would return to the city to-day before starting for his concert on Monday in Montreal.

Ernst Goerlitz, under whose management Mr. Caruso has been singing in concert, last night explained his star's presence in the city.

"Signor Caruso did not sing in Scranton because I asked him not to do so," said Mr. Goerlitz. "If the local manager had wired me how small the advance sale was we should not have gone to Scranton at all. Instead he left me in ignorance of conditions until we arrived there, and then, when I called upon him to make good his guarantee, he declared he could not do so. Caruso is so good-natured he would have been perfectly willing to appear. I think that the small sale was largely due to the recent convention of Elks in that city."

After Caruso's concert in Montreal he will come back once more to New York and will make final preparations for his Summer abroad. He will sail Thursday on the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria.

OPERA HOUSE LOAN EXTENDED

The Metropolitan Obtains a Ten-Year Renewal of $1,000,000 Mortgage.

The Metropolitan Opera House has been mortgaged by the Metropolitan Opera and Real Estate Company to the United States Trust Company for $1,000,000, due in ten years and bearing 4½ per cent. interest.

This mortgage represents no new indebtedness, but is simply the refunding of a loan for the same amount, made by the Mutual Life Insurance Company, which fell due on May 1. The Mutual Life mortgage had been in existence fifteen years, having been made originally for ten years and later extended for five years. The rate of interest on the five-year extension was 4 per cent.

Mme. Sidkey Sings for Brooklyn.

Mme. Sidkey, wife of Sidkey Bey, one of the members of the Turkish Legation, sang an air from "Trovatore" at the Ridge Club, Seventy-second Street, Bay Ridge, last evening. Her voice is a pleasing one, with warm color. It is probable that she will study for the operatic stage.

Six Cents Damages for Expulsion.

The second trial of the suit of the Sparrow Theatrical Amusement Company of Montreal against the Eastern Circuit Association of Theatrical Managers ended yesterday before Judge Holt in the United States Circuit Court with an award to the plaintiff of 6 cents damages. The Sparrow company was expelled from membership in the association for an alleged violation of agreement on the part of its representative, William A. Edwards. It claimed damages for the expulsion.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Julian Edwards, composer of "The Gay Musician," which is to open at Wallack's on Monday night, will conduct the orchestra for the first performance.

The new musical piece in which Blanche Ring may star next season under the management of Joe Weber is called "The Queen of Wall Street."

Edith Helena, the coloratura soprano of the Italian Opera Company at the American Theatre, has been engaged by William Morris for the Sunday concerts to-morrow afternoon and evening.

Matthew White, Jr., dramatic critic of Munsey's Magazine, has completed a three-act modern play entitled "The Truth Untold," in collaboration with Fred V. Greene, Jr. Mr. White has also completed a four-act version of "Stop, Look, and Listen," which May Tully has done this season as a vaudeville sketch.

The Pathfinders and Trailers' Club will hold a jubilee at Blaney's Lincoln Square Theatre on Sunday, May 24.

Mlle. Dazie has begun rehearsals for the new Ziegfeld revue. She will be assisted by W. C. Schrode, the clown, in one of her new dances.

Alexia, the Franco-Russian dancer and pantomimist, who is to be the leading attraction at the opening of Hammerstein's Roof Garden on June 1, will sail to-day from Liverpool aboard the Lusitania.

W. B. BININGER DEAD.

A Magazine and Newspaper Writer with Many Friends and Interests.

William Burger Bininger, widely known as a magazine writer and an authority on New York society, died suddenly of apoplexy early yesterday morning at Oakwood, North Hamburg, N. Y., the estate of his sister, Miss Elizabeth Bininger. For the last year his health has been a source of alarm to his friends.

Mr. Bininger belonged to the old régime. Ever since his graduation from Yale in 1874 he has been prominently identified with interesting newspaper work concerning social and coaching news. His own social position enabled him to write with authority. Many of his articles appeared in THE TIMES.

While at Yale Mr. Bininger was one of the most popular men in his class. He played on the baseball team, and was prominent in many other ways. When he returned to New York he became a member of the Knickerbocker Club, and in the rooms of this club he had been a familiar figure for thirty years. He leaves two sisters, Miss Elizabeth Bininger and Mrs. Francis R. Rives, the widow of a brother of George L. and Reginald W. Rives. Mrs. Rives now lives in England, but for years her town house was at 829 Lexington Avenue.

Several years ago Mr. Bininger retired from active newspaper work and devoted his time to magazine articles, which were illumined by many reminiscent items concerning old New York. At his club he was celebrated as a raconteur. He was frequently asked to write his memoirs, owing to the many persons of distinction with whom he came in contact. Last June it was feared that he would die, and many of his friends went to North Hamburg to be with him. He rallied slightly and wrote several articles during the Winter. Last Wednesday he came to town. He looked ill and worn, but he said that Summer in the country would improve him.

He was the son of Abraham Bininger, a merchant of means, and was born in 1852. His funeral will be held on Sunday at 2 o'clock at North Hamburg. The burial will be in the Moravian Cemetery in Staten Island.

NEILS OLSEN IS DEAD.

He Was the New York Yacht Club's Superintendent Nearly 40 Years.

Neils Olsen, 73 years old, for nearly forty years Superintendent of the New York Yacht Club, who was known probably to more yachtsmen than any other one man in the United States, died of pneumonia yesterday morning at his home, 501 East Eighty-sixth Street. He was ill only nine days.

Olsen was born in Norway, and came to this country at the age of 18. Seven days after landing in this city he shipped on Alexander Major's yacht Norma as Captain's boy. For fourteen years, excepting infrequent and short intervals, he remained in the service of Mr. Major, making the transatlantic race in 1866 in the schooner yacht Fleetwing, which won the event.

Soon afterward Olsen entered the service of Commodore Franklin Osgood, sailing as mate successively on the Vision, the Magic, and the Columbia, each of which won ocean races for America's Cup, the Magic beating the British yacht Cambria in 1870 and the Columbia winning from the Livonia in the following year.

In this year the New York Yacht Club decided to employ a manager for its clubhouse at Madison Avenue and Twenty-seventh Street and the position was offered to Olsen. He took it and held it until his death yesterday.

For years he had been in almost sole control of the club, and his duties had made him intimately acquainted with every yachtsman of fame in the last quarter of a century. Among others he knew and was liked by Commodore Bourne, old Commodore Vanderbilt, and the other members of the family who have since become members of the club; the Goulds, Ledyards, Duncans, and Iselins. Olsen knew many foreign yachtsmen also, among them Sir Thomas Lipton, Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, and Lord Dunraven. His acquaintance among navy men was extensive, and he knew Admiral Bob Evans well.

Olsen was married twice, his first wife, who was Miss Catherine Curran, having died many years ago. He married Mrs. Ellen Campbell, a widow, in 1904. Besides his widow, Olsen leaves a son, John O. Olsen, assistant cashier of the Twelfth Ward Bank.

Funeral services will be held at the Olsen home at 8 o'clock this evening. The burial will be in Woodlawn Cemetery on Sunday.

PRINCIPAL BROKE UP A SCHOOLBOY DUEL

Gulick Planned to Sit by His Girl at a Concert and Some One Gave His Seat Away.

HE BLAMED FENNEBRESQUE

Fight to a Finish Was Arranged and the Girls Were There, but So Was Principal Jennings.

Harold Gulick, who attends the Jamaica High School, was an usher at the musicale of the Euphonia Club of the school Thursday night, and when he had escorted a girl acquaintance to a seat well down in front he dropped his hat in the seat next to her and went about his duties with a renewed interest in hastening them to a finish. These done, he hastened to the seat with a sigh of relief and pleasant anticipation, which changed to rage when he found that some one had given his seat to another. He blamed George Fennebresque, son of Prof. Louis Fennebresque, for it.

After the concert Gulick sought out Fennebresque, whispered a few fierce words in his ear, to which Fennebresque nodded, and yesterday word passed around through the school that there would be a finish fight in the school basement after the afternoon session. As the time for the fight drew near the boys filled the basement, while the girls sought the basement on their side of the building, which is separated from the boys' side by a couple of oaken doors easily opened.

The principals entered the ring and stripped quickly to the waist. The timekeeper looked at his watch, and the word to fight hung on the referee's lips, when out from a coalbin jumped Principal Charles J. Jennings. There was a stampede for the exits, but in each door loomed the form of a teacher. The fighters were trapped.

After taking the names of those present, Principal Jennings delivered a lecture and allowed them to go. He wouldn't tell how he knew the fight was coming off, but it was whispered around school that the sight of Gulick's well-developed muscles had chilled Fennebresque's enthusiasm for the fray and that he had sent a message home for relief.

Gulick, who was suspended temporarily, is a hero.

Young Fennebresque and his father denied last night that either one of them had "tipped off" Principal Jennings about the fight.

"I am not a brawler," said young Fennebresque, "but I should have defended myself. I did not seek the fight. Gulick sent me a written challenge, and I should not have backed out. However, the fight would have been over a mistake, for I did not give Gulick's seat to any one. Either the occupant just took it himself or some one else gave it to him."

Social Notes.

Mrs. James B. M. Grosvenor, who was operated upon for appendicitis last week, is now convalescent at her home, 39 East Fiftieth Street.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Scoville are at the Buckingham for several days before going to their country place in Massachusetts.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry Hun of Albany and Mrs. Henry Sabin Leake, who have returned to town from Short Hills, N. J., are at the Buckingham.

John A. Hoagland and Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Bigelow are at the Gotham.

Col. H. Anthony Dyer and Mrs. Dyer gave a luncheon yesterday at Newport for Mrs. Edward Lauterbach and Mrs. Roswell D. Hitchcock.

Miss Rebecca Lane Hooper, daughter of President Hooper of the Brooklyn Institute, has been elected President of the Radcliffe Club of New York.

An evening of folk games and dances was had last night at the Kindergarten Room of the Teachers College. There were gymnastic and guild games; the latter included the Danish shoemaker's dance and the Swedish tailor's dance. There were also meadow and May games, harvest games, including binding the sheaf and the vine-dresser's dance, and some Russian games and dances.

"A Modern Prometheus"
A NOVEL OF ASSISI
BY
Martha Gilbert Dickinson Bianchi

"Among the various volumes dealing with the relations of the Roman Church and modern society there are few better balanced than 'A Modern Prometheus.' The story centers about the reaction of the New England conscience upon Roman Catholicism and, incidentally touches upon divorce and remarriage."—The World To-day, Chicago.

WRIGHT BROTHERS NOT DISCOURAGED

Aeroplane Had Started on Endurance Test When It Was Wrecked.

GOING TO EUROPE SOON

Under Contract to Furnish U. S. Government with "Heavier Than Air" Machine by August 28.

Special to The New York Times.

MANTEO, N. C., May 15.—The Wright brothers, whose aeroplane was wrecked yesterday by a mistake in adjusting the lever which controlled the steering gear, are not discouraged by the temporary halt put to their experiments. They feel that they have produced a machine which will fly and is capable of being controlled.

They will leave here immediately for Dayton, Ohio. They will not discuss their experiments, but it is known that they will go to Europe within a few weeks. It is not known whether or not they will make experimental flights there. In August they will fly in this country again. Their machine will then be submitted to the required Government test.

The aeroplane had been launched on an endurance test of one hour and twenty minutes yesterday, which was terminated by the wreck. Wilbur Wright, who steered the machine, said to-day that he is confident the machine would have remained in the air for that time had he not by an error caused the wreck. The machine had been responding promptly to its rudders, and the engine was working perfectly. The overheating of the engine, which has heretofore given the Wrights much trouble, and which it was feared might prevent extended flights of the machine, seems to have been overcome.

The diversion of the attention of Wilbur Wright for an instant is responsible for the error which caused the disaster. Scanning a sand hill which he was approaching to determine the point where he would pass over and the elevation required to clear it safely, the side of the machine then being inclined downward, he pushed the lever in the wrong direction and the machine dashed to the ground. The engine was the only part of the machine that sustained the shock. No part of it was broken, and it continued running after the machine had been wrecked.

WASHINGTON, May 15.—To the officials of the Signal Corps of the army who have been watching with interest the aeroplane flights of the Wright brothers at Manteo, N. C., the news of the disaster to their craft was the cause of much regret.

The Wright brothers are under contract to deliver to the War Department by Aug. 28 a "heavier than air" machine to cost $25,000, and it was generally presumed that the machine being tried at Manteo embodied the principles of the one to be furnished the War Department. As more than three months remain in which the Wright brothers may construct and deliver their machine to the department, the officials say that they see no reason why this should not be accomplished.

LONG FLIGHT FOR KNABENSHUE.

Plans a Toledo to Cleveland Trip in His New Airship.

Special to The New York Times.

TOLEDO, May 15.—Within the next ten days Roy Knabenshue, the Toledo aeronaut, will attempt a long flight in a new airship. He will try to make a continuous passage from Toledo to Cleveland, about 112 miles. Part of the way he will sail above Lake Erie.

The gasbag of the craft is cigar shaped, 112 feet long, and is constructed of the finest silk. It is 17½ feet in diameter. Suspended to the gigantic cylindrical balloon is the hull, a delicate trussed frame of spruce steel tubing and piano wire. Three wicker baskets are suspended from the frame. Two men will operate it. A fifteen horse power engine and a ten-foot propeller will be used to navigate the craft.

Capt. Chandler and other Government officials interested in aerial navigation will witness this exhibition.

AIRSHIP RACE FOR QUEENS

Many Entries Ready for the Maspeth (L. I.) Fair Contest.

The airship races proposed for the Queens County Fair at Maspeth, L. I., in the week of May 25, were assured yesterday by the receipt by President George W. Tomasso of a telegram from Charles J. Strobel announcing that he would enter Mr. Beachy and Mr. Dallas, the winners, respectively, of the first and second prizes in the great airship contest which was held in St. Louis during the World's Fair. Entries also have been received from John L. Winn, manager of the Godare airship; the Baysdorfer-Yaker airship, Capt. Baldwin, who is now manufacturing airships for the United States Government; Roy Knabenshue, and the Laroux Balloon Company of Boston.

President Tomasso has announced that he will offer three prizes for the airship race, which will total $3,500. The route of the contest will be from the fair grounds in Maspeth, L. I., to Manhattan and return. The winner will receive $2,000, the second $1,000, the third $500.

Arrangements are now in progress whereby the contests will be held under the auspices of the Aero Club of America, and Leo Stevens has been asked to act as presiding judge.

A number of prominent aeronauts throughout the country have been invited to assist Mr. Stevens, among them being the executive officers of the Signal Corps of the United States Army.

There's more than one way for a boy to get caught.

These queer shades of browns and greens—they're popular now, but apt to get so tiresome that a boy is caught unless he has several suits.

Queer for us to say so, perhaps, for we've lots of these new shades.

But we also have lots of unobtrusive and smart looking grays, much more satisfying in the long run.

Double breasted and Norfolk suits, $6.50 to $16.50.

MOTORBOAT HITS A GIG.

Knocks Two Men Overboard and Then Speeds On, but Is Caught.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., May 15.—Harold Briggs and George Carter of the New Rochelle Rowing Club while out in a double scull gig on the Sound near Echo Bay this afternoon were run down by a fast motorboat. Their gig was smashed and they were thrown into the water. The motorboat did not stop.

Capt. Carl Cuchler was nearby in a St. Lawrence gig, picked up the two oarsmen, and brought them into the clubhouse. He then got another boat and made after the motorboat, and after a chase caught up with it. Capt. Suchler insisted that the motorboat men return. They did so, and after making arrangements to buy a new gig for Carter and Briggs they went on. Who the owner or operator of the motorbooat was has not been made known.

It is feared the accident will bar Briggs and Carter from the Flushing Bay Regatta, whic hthey had entered, as a new gig can hardly be obtained in time.

AMERICAN GOLFERS DRAW.

Former Women Title Holders Will Compete in English Championship.

Five of America's leading women golfers will take part in the sixteenth annual women's open championship of England at St. Andrews next week. There are 148 entries—a record number, the previous highest total being 136. The five American entrants drew byes in the drawing. Miss Mollie B. Adams of Wolaston, who reached the sixth round three years ago, meets Miss Madge Maitland, a Scottish international player in the second round. Miss Frances C. Griscom of Merion C. C., Philadelphia, the United States champion of 1900, opposes Mrs. Sumpter of Hunstanton, an English internationalist; Miss Anita Phipps of Springfield, a semi-finalist in last year's United States championship, has been drawn against Miss Scovell of Foxrock, while Miss Marjorie N. Phelps, Brookline C. C., plays Miss Edith Leitch of Carlisle and Silloth.

Miss Maria F. Phelps of Brookline and sister to Miss Marjorie Phelps has singularly been drawn against Miss Cecilia Leitch of Carlisle and Silloth, whose sister, Miss Edith Leitch, plays Miss Marjorie Phelps. Miss May Hezlet, the holder, meets Mrs. Constant. Her sister, Miss Florence Hezlet, the other finalist last year, is also a contestant. Mrs. A. N. Cuthell, better known as Miss Rhona Adair of Portrush, is another famous golfer in the first round. As Miss Adair, she visited America after winning the championship seven years ago as the guest of Miss Frances C. Griscom.

RAINY DAY GOLFERS.

Garfield Wins Trophy in Eastern Trade Association Tournament.

Cold weather and rain failed to mar either the tournament play or the enthusiasm of the Spring handicap competition of the Eastern Trade Golf Association on the links of the Fox Hills Golf Club, Staten Island, yesterday. Although but fifteen turned in cards for the 36-hole match, there was twice that number of members on the course, but several were content to make but one round of the links and enjoy the comforts of the clubhouse for the remainder of the day. T. B. Garfield was the prize-winner, his gross and net scores both being the best of the day, his card being 169, 8, 161. T. C. Jennings, the only scratch player, took 179. The leaders and scores were:

LA BRANCHE'S AIM TRUE.

Anglers' Club Member Wins First Prize in Central Park Tourney.

George M. L. La Branche was the conspicuous performer in the Anglers' Club of New York tournament at the Harlem Mere, in Central Park, yesterday. For two years previously Mr. La Branche has showed himself to be far and away the best caster for accuracy with a half-ounce bait, and yesterday he broke his own club record of 32 demerits by reducing the mark to 22. Next to the winner were E. B. Rice, 32; Dr. I. R. Held, 35; A. B. Humphrey, Jr., 36; A. J. Marsh, 44; H. Friedman, 49; C. J. McCarthy, 53; P. D. Frazer, 55; E. F. Todd, 94, and W. M. Plevins of Northamptonshire, England, 113. Of the professional competitors, Benjamin F. Flegel of Warren, Ohio, made the best score, of 25 demerits.

In the bait-casting competition for accuracy with quarter-ounce weight, Harry Friedman won first prize with 32 demerits; E. B. Rice second, 45; A. J. Marsh of the Newark fly-casting Club third, 57; Dr. R. J. Held fourth, 78; G. M. L. La Branche, 105; E. F. Todd, 136; Perry D. Frazer, 223; W. J. Ehrich, C. J. McCarthy of Boston, and W. M. Wiles withdrew.

The dry-fly casting for accuracy, for amateurs only, brought out the strongest field of the tournament. According to the conditions, the weight of the rod was unlimited, the buoys being at twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, and sixty feet. If the fly fell within one foot of the buoy the cast was considered as accurate. For each foot or a fraction of a foot in excess of one foot from a buoy a demerit of one was counted. In this event, C. J. McCarthy of Boston was first, with five demerits; Eddie Rice and Perry D. Frazer were tied for second prize, but in the cast-off Rice won with 6 points to 17 for Frazer. W. M. McGuckin was fourth, with 14 points; F. W. Brotherton, 23; Dr. Held, 25; George Le Branche, 30; J. L. Kirk, 34, and W. M. Plevins, 55.

Catholic Athletic League Games.

All indications point to some sterling competitions at the second annual senior championships and athletic carnival of the Catholic Athletic League, to be held at the Pastime Athletic Club Oval on the afternoon of Memorial Day, May 30. In addition to the championship and handicap events there will be a 600-yard novice, senior and junior; a midget relay race of a quarter of a mile for boys under 4 feet 8 inches in height and under 14 years old; a relay of a quarter of a mile for boys under 16 years old, and a 75-yard dash, scratch, for boys under 16 years. Besides medals to first, second, and third in each event, a banner will be presented to the club scoring the most points in championship events.

15-Mile Race at West Side Grounds.

There will be run this evening at the New West Side Grounds, Fifty-fourth Street, between Eighth and Ninth Avenues, a fifteen-mile professional race that should appeal to the lovers of these long-distance events. The contestants are men who have made records for themselves along this line. They are "Bob" Hallen, the professional long-distance champion; "Mike" Spring, the ex-champion, and Percy Smallwood of England.

Huntington Bay for Motorboats.

Preparations are being made already for the annual motorboat races, which are to be held this year in the Bay of Huntington, on the northern side of Long Island, about opposite South Norwalk, Conn., instead of on the Hudson River course.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, May 15.—With one fell swoop the Giants to-day fell upon Cincinnati and pounded out a victory just at the time when another defeat appeared inevitable. For seven innings the batters from the Polo Grounds made frantic though futile efforts to tally, but several times a player perished on the third bag for want of a base hit to bring him home. Meanwhile "Dummy" Taylor had curves, speed, and other deceptive things that go to fool a batsman, but there was something stronger than a horseshoe or rabbit's foot charm over him, for the seven dreary, unproductive innings in which the Giants were blanked with alarming regularity proved the calm before the coming storm.

The storm broke with cyclonic fury in the eighth inning, and after the final reverberating rumble of thunder had died away nine runs loomed up on the scoreboard and defeat was turned into victory. It was not, however, due entirely to the Giants' stickwork that they won by the score of 9 to 2, but poor fieldwork on the part of the locals materially aided the visitors in their run-getting séance.

With Campbell for Cincinnati and Taylor for New York, as opposing pitchers, the game for seven innings was a duel. The "Reds" had notched one tally while a string of goose eggs ornamented the blocks opposite New York's name on the score board. Devlin found a vacant space in the left pasture and dropped the ball there. Nicklin walked and Bridwell singled, filling the bases. Merkle was sent to bat for Taylor. He sent an easy one to Hulswitt at short, but a fumble resulted and Devlin and Nicklin scored. Bridwell followed the pair over the plate when Tenney was buried at first. Two more runs were added by Merkle and Shannon when Donlin hit for one base, but a bad throw by Lobert enabled Donlin to reach third. Seymour kept up the procession and singled, sending in Donlin. Another hit was registered by Bresnahan, Devlin sent a skyscraper to Lobert, and Seymour and Bresnahan piled on the agony by executing a double steal, and then they raced home on Nicklin's single. The latter stole second and recorded the ninth run when Bridwell hit safely. Cincinnati made a run in the ninth inning, but it was too late, and New York was an easy winner. The score:

TUXEDO HORSE SHOW.

Many Novel Features for Annual Exhibition June 19 and 20.

Thirty classes will be judged at the annual exhibition of the Tuxedo Horse Show Association, to be held at Tuxedo Park June 19 and 20. Nine classes are devoted to horses in harness, for which $50 or a silver cup will be awarded to the winners. Three classes have been set apart for ponies in harness, and trotters and road horses, while the remainder of the classes are divided between saddle horses, appointment classes, competitions, and local exhibits.

Four events are scheduled for competition. Purses of $100 have been offered for trotters and pacers, for best two in three half-mile heats. Single horses and runabouts will race one mile for the E. H. Harriman Cup, and a cup will be offered for a ladies' driving contest, for the best driving by a lady of horse and wagon through obstacles placed at different distances and angles. Entries close on June 10 with Pierre Lorillard, Jr., Secretary, Tuxedo Park, N. Y.

Motor Cyclists Hear Good Reports.

Motor cyclists who attended the regular monthly meeting of the Federation of Motor Cyclists 1908 Meet clubs at the Grand Union Hotel recently showed much enthusiasm over the report of the committees having the arrangements for the National meet during the first week in July in charge. President Betts announced that all the details for the event will be perfected at the next meeting in June, and he assured the motorists that the meet, in the number of entries, extensiveness of the programme, and the entertainment of visitors will undoubtedly surpass anything that has ever been done in the motor cycling line. There will be three National championships decided, in addition to hill climbing, endurance runs, and other interesting competitions.

De Witt Clinton Wins Shoot.

De Witt Clinton defeated Morris High yesterday in a dual rifle shoot by the score of 242 to 239. The match, which was shot at the De Witt Clinton ranges, produced some excellent scores. Byrnes and Morgan of Morris High both made the highest possible score, while three boys on the De Witt Clinton team came within one point of reaching a complete score. The shooting shows both teams have an excellent chance for the interscholastic championship, which will be decided next Saturday. The scores:

Tryout for Revolver Marksmen.

Secretary James B. Crabtree of the National Revolver Association yesterday had a conference with James E. Sullivan, Secretary of the American Committee of the Olympic Games, and announced that the National R. A. would hold its revolver tryouts within the next ten days, and the Olympic Committee will be able to enter a team in the Olympic revolver shooting contests that begin at Bisley July 8. The entries will close on July 1. The National Rifle Association of America will also pick a team, and America is to be represented at Bisley in all shooting contests on July 8, 9, and 10.

Burns-Squires Fight Canceled.

DUBLIN, May 15.—The negotiations for a fight between "Tommy" Burns, the heavyweight champion, and "Bill" Squires, the Australian pugilist, have failed. The promoters consider that the financial terms insisted upon by Burns are too stiff.

MAIDEN COLT WINS BAYCHESTER STAKES

Question Mark Gallops in Front All the Way for Belmont Park Feature.

BAYONET WINS THE 'CHASE

Bellwether Is the Only Successful Favorite in the Mud at the Westchester Club's Course.

The racing at Belmont Park course yesterday was as dismal as wretched weather, a muddy track, and light fields could make it. The patronage was small, and the big wind-swept stands were almost empty throughout the afternoon, the limited number of visitors making the most of the shelter offered by the betting rings. The track was deep with thin mud, and scratches cut the fields down in most of the events.

For the betting patrons there were upsets straight through the afternoon, with about the greatest surprise of the day provided in the result of the feature of the card, the Baychester Stakes, for three-year-olds, at one mile, which was won in hollow style by the extrme outsider in the betting, Question Mark. Five horses were named to start for this event, three of these being in the one interest of A. J. Joyner, but because of the going the Joyner entry was reduced to a single starter, in the colt Golden Pearl. Hessian and Rialto, both sons of Watercress, and supposed to have an aversion to soft going, were withdrawn in favor of Golden Pearl, which, with the top weight and ridden by E. Dugan, started as an odds-on favorite over Robert Cooper and the maiden colt Question Mark.

The race brought the horses out at the finish in the exact reverse of the betting, for Question Mark went to the front immediately after the start, and galloped there all the distance, winning easily by three lengths from Robert Cooper, while Golden Pearl floundered in the mud and tired so fast at the end that he finished a bad last.

In the steeplechase, fourth on the card, Kara always was the public choice, with Aiken and Palm the next best backed, but none of these ever appeared to be really dangerous in the contest, Bayonet, the five-year-old half-brother to the Brooklyn Handicap winner, The Picket, racing in front all the way and winning away off before Palm, second, and Kara, third. Aiken broke down in the last half mile and did not finish.

A third long-chance winner turned up in Colonel Jack, which started at 8 to 1 in the first race and romped in first after trailing behind for nearly half a mile, while Aletheuo, the top weight and favorite, galloped out in front. In the second race, two of the six starters ran in the name of J. E. Madden, who declared to win with Harrigan in preference to Sir Martin. Right Sort, the public favorite, broke in on the Madden plans and fought out with the Madden entry at the end in such style that Sir Martin had to go on and win, Right Sort beating Harrigan a neck for second place.

Dander, second choice to Wamboro in the maidens' selling sprint, was in the lead through about all the running, and, ridden out, lasted long enough to win by a length and a half from Father Stafford, with all the others beaten far off.

It was not until the running of the last race that a post favorite was successful, and then Bellwether, as a slight choice over Sir Toddington, broke out of the crowd in the first half furlong and, making all the pace, won easily by three lengths from Chantilly.

The summaries:

NOTES OF THE TURF.

The steeplechaser Aiken, owned by W. T. Townes of Virginia, struck a fence in the cross-country race at the Belmont Park track yesterday, and broke his shoulder. The rider, E. Heider, dismounted as soon as he found the horse was crippled, and as there was no hope of saving the animal, Aiken was shot on the field of the racetrack.

The four-year-old horse Superman, owned by James R. Keene and winner of the Brooklyn Handicap last season, came out of the race for the Metropolitan Handicap on Wednesday lamed by a mishap in the early running. The horse's condition has not improved since the contest, and Superman is on the shelf temporarily. It is not known yet what is the extent of the injury, but it is severe enough to put a check on his training.

J. C. Goode, owner of the filly Lucille R., made a $700 apology to James McLaughlin at the Belmont Park race course yesterday, and set horsemen to wondering what might happen next. Goode bid up McLaughlin's filly Personal, after she won a selling race Thursday, the bidding up causing McLaughlin to pay $700 to retain his horse, of which premium Goode, owner of the second horse, received half, or $350. Later Goode discovered that he had bid while angered, and feeling that he had done an injustice to McLaughlin he insisted on recompensing McLaughlin, and giving McLaughlin what his bid had cost. Goode accepted a net loss of $350 for himself.

Sir Toddington, a starter in the last race at Belmont Park yesterday, tore off a shoe just before the horses were called to the post, and the call for the race had to be delayed until the plate was replaced, the shoeing being done in the paddock.

Charles W. Clark, son of ex-United States Senator W. A. Clark of Montana, appeared as an owner of race horses for the first time in the East yesterday, when Chantilly, which formerly ran in the name of F. D. Weir, raced as the property of Mr. Clark, carrying the Clark colors, "copper" jacket and cap. The change in ownership was said to be due to sentiment on Mr. Clark's part, as he bred the horse and at one time owned him when Chantilly was racing in the West.

YACHTING NOTES.

The motor cruising boat which has just been finished at City Island for the Prospect Gun Club of Freeport, L. I., from designs by Henry Gielow, will have her first trial tests to-morrow. The boat has been named "P. G. C.," the club initials. She is 47 feet 6 inches over all, 47 feet on the water line, and 10 feet beam. Her motor equipment is a three-cylinder twenty horse power engine, capable of driving the boat ten miles an hour. The main saloon is 15 feet long, and the boat is of the trunk cabin cruising type.

C. K. G. Billings's new turbine steam yacht Vanadis, which has lately been finished in the Clyde, is to have her trial trip this week, and early in June she will start for New York on her maiden trip across the Atlantic in command of Capt. Farrington, who was formerly in command of Mr. Billings's yacht Surf.

Charles T. Burgess of the Boston Yacht Club has entered his cutter Alga for the Marblehead-Bermuda race on June 4. She is one of the old Burgess forty-footers, and will race in Class C. Eight yachts are now entered for the long-distance race. The entries will close May 29.

The Indian Harbor Yacht Club will hold its cruising race to New London, June 23. The Harlem Yacht Club's race to Stratford Shoal and return to City Island has been set for Aug. 15.

Best STOCK Car of the World.

¶ There are those among our friends who have not yet placed their orders for STEARNS cars who may be disappointed in getting 1908 deliveries. Our sales since the Briarcliff Race have been phenomenal. The demand for regular STEARNS chassis, with Guy Vaughan body, has exceeded our ability to furnish this popular type. Another of these cars will arrive early next week.

Endurance

¶ At no time in the history of American automobile building has a team of cars made such a remarkable display of endurance and consistent running as was shown by the 3 STEARNS cars in the Briarcliff Race. Experts were unanimous in asserting that never before had there been a speed test embodying so many features of strain and difficult road conditions.

¶ We are prepared to make immediate deliveries of regular touring cars. At the present rate of demand we will not be able to say this for any great length of time. Let us take you for a demonstration—to Briarcliff if you wish it—and show you STEARNS Briarcliff endurance.

Homes for New Yorkers in the Bronx.

To-morrow's issue of The New York Times will present a graphic description of The Bronx's possibilities in the immediate future as a residential centre for crowded-out inhabitants of Manhattan.

Special attention will be directed to the transportation facilities, present and prospective, of The Bronx; to the handsome small homes taking the place of flats; to the development of factories, general business, and real estate values; to the schools; to the administration of the municipality; to its varied industries; to its parks.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Irregular, Closing Strong—Call Money Rates, 1½@1¾ Per Cent.

GOLD ENGAGED FOR BERLIN

Over $3,500,000 Taken for Export During Day—Banks Lose Cash on Week's Movements.

The stock market underwent yesterday the first severe selling test which it has had to encounter since the inception of the long advance, and although prices dropped so sharply while the pressure was strongest as to indicate loss of control of the movement support was eventually forthcoming, and in the subsequent recovery not only were the early losses made good, but a number of issues reached new high quotations for the year. The opening was irregular, but without decided trend. Until around midday there was little to differentiate the session from many of its predecessors. The stocks which then came into the market seemed to represent in equal degree profit-taking and short selling. They were absorbed slowly and at price recessions, but the support in the end proved efficient, and undoubtedly served to force short covering by speculators whose courage has been for some time past plainly unequal to their convictions. Activity shifted from the metal stocks and the low-priced specialties to standard shares, with Union Pacific the market leader. It was this stock which was selected as the pivot for the afternoon recovery, and on heavy buying it made at 144¼ a new high record for the year. The market was purely professional, the tactics used being frankly manipulative. There was nothing whatever in the day's news to account either for the early depression or the later rally. The announcement of further exports of gold, this time to Germany direct, were received with indifference on the Stock Exchange, and similar inattention was the lot of the progress at Washington of the new Vreeland currency measure. The Senate's action upon this bill must result in further conferences, and it is still uncertain what shape final legislation along these lines will take. From the fashion in which the subject has been approached, however, it is safe to assert that the ultimate measure will be of little benefit, if it is not positively harmful in character.

Where all previous gold engagements had had for their destination Paris yesterday's takings of $3,500,000 were consigned to Berlin. It has been the understanding in banking circles, however, that the gold hitherto engaged would eventually find its way to Germany, where unsettled industrial conditions have served to disturb sentiment. The total engagements thus far are $20,750,000. It is worth noting that although Paris had no part in yesterday's engagements here bankers of that city secured from the Bank of England during the course of the day about $750,000 in gold coin. As a result of the withdrawals of United States deposits and the drain of gold the banks appear this week to have made the first loss on currency movements reported by them in many weeks. The real loss to these sources was offset in large part by continued receipts from the interior, and preliminary estimates of the various movements foreshadow a decrease in cash of only some $3,000,000. The money market continues easy; call rates yesterday failed to rise as high as the 2 per cent. quotation which has been the rule for some time.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Sharp Seesaws and Heavy Trade—Closes 3 Points Down to 15 Up.

Cotton was very excited and irregular again yesterday, a sharp early advance being followed by a severe break and a rally toward the close, which was led by the new crop months. The close was steady at a decline of 3 points to an advance of 15 points. Sales for the day were estimated at 400,000 bales.

The market opened firm at unchanged prices to an advance of 9 points and advanced on higher cables and big English spot sales.

Late advices from Manchester stated that spinners of American cotton had decided to close their mills for the week ending June 8 and for two days a week for the following month.

Superintendent King's weekly total movement figures follow: Port receipts, 7,844,251 bales, against 9,568,854 last year; overland to mills and Canada, 663,307, against 1,111,270 last year; Southern mill takings, 1,863,000, against 1,981,000 last year; stock at interior towns in excess of September 1, 236,215, against 213,631 last year. Brought into sight thus far for season, 10,606,773, against 12,874,755 last year.

The total crop movement is respectively for 258 days this season against 259 days last season.

Less Activity in Curb Trading, with Prices Firmly Maintained.

NEVADA CONSOLIDATED UP

Gains ⅞ Point on Renewal of Activity—Other Issues Close Generally Below Day's Highest.

There was less activity in Curb stocks yesterday, though prices were firmly held, and at the close the gains were many in the mining list. Some of the active stocks closed below the high levels of the day. United Copper was one of these, which, having risen to 8⅛, sold finally at 7¾. Greene-Cananea sold from 9¼ to 9½, and closed at 9⅛. Cumberland-Ely made a gain of ⅛ after transactions of 3,840 shares. Nevada Consolidated was the feature of strength, selling from 12¼ up to 13⅛, which was the last price. Transactions were reported at 6,020 shares.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 15.—Quincy lost 6 points, Old Dominion 2, while the general list sold off about a point throughout. During the late trading, however, the undertone turned strong, and under the lead of Atlantic, which advanced on Western buying orders, the market closed steady at the recovery.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 15.—Reading and United States Steel common again contributed more than half of the day's business. Some of the purely local issues displayed heaviness, especially Rapid Transit and United Gas, the former closing with a net loss of ⅝, the latter ½. Tonopah Mining was firm to strong on statements by Directors that a "dividend of 25 cents had been earned and ought to be declared" next month. Total sales, 35,368 shares.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Market Terrorizing the Bears.

A market like yesterday's does more to spoil the courage of the bears than any other kind of market which can be devised. It would be impossible to estimate the number of traders in Wall Street who sold out a fortnight or more ago and who have ever since been trying to find the top of the market. It is one of the Street's sayings that there is no bear like a disappointed bull, and New York, south of Fulton Street, is filled with bears manufactured after this order. Day after day they have put out a little stock in the belief that things were going too fast to last, and their convictions were solidified by the news from a great many banking quarters, and each day that they sold stocks the market went up a little bit more in a wholly unconcerned manner, driving them before it. Their convictions became firmer as their courage diminished. Yesterday, when stocks like Union Pacific broke 2 points or more with considerable abruptness, these traders seemed to be coming into their own, but it was all over before an hour had passed and Union Pacific was on its way to a new high price for the year.

⁂

Movements in Convertible Bonds.

While Union Pacific was turning up, after its sharp slump around midday, the 4 per cent. convertible bonds, which had followed the stock down at a slower pace, also faced about. Their course called attention to the great number of bonds with the convertible feature which are now traded in on the Exchange, this conversion privilege having been a very popular adjunct to much of the financing of the last three or four years. Bonds of this kind have been following the stocks into which they are ultimately convertible at a fairly definite distance, this being measured in most cases by the difference between the issue price of the bond and the price at which it may be exchanged into stock. In the case of the Union Pacific, for example, the bond is convertible into Union Pacific stock at 175. At 145 the stock is apparently 30 points away from the conversion, but holders of bonds who bought them, say, around 80, to which they went, at the prevailing price of about 90 have the advantage of this discount from par in the making of an exchange for stock. Other convertible bonds, like Brooklyn Rapid Transit 4s, Erie 4s, and Atchison 4s, tend to follow closely the fluctuations in the stocks of these companies.

⁂

Distribution on the Advance.

Another "million-share-day" served to revive again stories of the distribution of stocks and a culmination of the advance, it being a well-established theory that long-drawn-out movements in either direction culminate with several days of active trading. There was undoubtedly a considerable volume of distributing sales in yesterday's market, but brokers on the floor of the Exchange who are in touch with the buying and selling insist that important blocks of stock are still intact. Nevertheless, the open bidding for stocks in the late afternoon by a house directly associated with those who are supposed to be the leaders in the present movement was looked upon as suspicious. Such manoeuvres often mark quite a different purpose.

⁂

Little Interest in Currency Bill.

It is curious how little interest Wall Street displays in the fate of the "perfected Vreeland Currency bill." This measure, passed by the House on Thursday, underwent torture at the hands of the Senate yesterday, and no one seems to know just how it is finally going to come out. Wall Street doesn't seem to care. Perhaps it has made up its mind that with anything like ordinary luck it will be a long time before any use will be found for any provisions of the bill, whatever it may be, and that in the meantime there is very little reason for worrying about it and its technicalities. Much more interest is taken in the fact that Congress is expected to adjourn on Wednesday of next week. If it does adjourn at that time it will mark the close of a long and anxious period for the financial community, although the worriment has proceeded from possible rather than actual legislation. There is an effort in some circles to connect the strength of New York City and other municipal bonds with the Vreeland measure, although this seems a trifle far fetched.

⁂

Germany and Our Gold.

It is not often that Berlin calls upon New York for gold, and perhaps for that reason its request at this time should receive special attention. Nevertheless there is a strong suspicion in banking quarters that much of the gold which has gone ostensibly to Paris in the last few weeks has in one form or another found its way into German banks. In five years Germany has taken only some $7,200,000 gold, while in the same period over $115,000,000 has gone to Paris. The last shipment to Germany was last Summer. At the moment the German Bank is understood to be making inducements in the way of allowing interest on gold in transit to obtain the metal, and reports have had it that this has applied to consignments from such distant points as Australia and South Africa.

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

H. H. ROGERS TO SELL $17,000,000 IN NOTES

Proceeds to Retire $10,000,000 Loan and Complete His Tidewater Railroad.

NE WFACTOR IN COALFIELDS

Mr. Rogers's Low-Grade Line Will Be a Formidable Rival of Other Soft Coal Roads.

H. H. Rogers, who is building the Virginia Railway, better known as the Tidewater Railroad, from the West Virginia coal fields to tidewater at Sewall's Point, near Norfolk, is making arrangements, it was learned in Wall Street yesterday, for the sale of $17,000,000 notes, the proceeds of which will be used to retire an outstanding $10,000,000 note issue and to complete construction of the line.

A little over a year ago Mr. Rogers arranged through the Central Trust Company acting as Trustee, an issue of $10,000,000 6 per cent. two-year notes, which were secured by the deposit of bonds of the Virginia Railway as well as by $10,000,000 interest or dividend paying securities. According to information in banking quarters the new notes will be secured by the same collateral as that underlying the old notes and by additional bonds of the Virginia Railway.

The arrangements for this additional financing by Mr. Rogers aroused much interest in Wall Street because of the unique position which the Tidewater Railroad occupies, not only by reason of its having until recently been financed by Mr. Rogers individually, but because of the remarkable standards which have been followed in the construction of the road. It has been described as the most perfectly constructed new line in the country, and it is built to haul much heavier trains than any now being hauled on American roads.

The Virginia Railway was organized in April, 1907, as a consolidation of the Tidewater Railroad and the Deepwater Railroad, which were the names under which the 443-mile line from Deepwater, West Va., to Sewall's Point, was being constructed. The Virginia Railway has an authorized stock issue of $35,000,000 and a bond issue of $33,500,000, exclusive of bonds which the company is authorized to issue for additional construction. In addition to this the Virginia Terminal Railway, a subsidiary, has an authorized bond issue of $10,000,000, of which, according to the latest available figures, only $500,000 are outstanding. The bonds which may be issued in excess of $33,500,000 may be sold at the rate of $75,000 a mile for each additional mile of main line, $50,000 a mile for branch lines, and $50,000 for each mile of second main track.

The Virginia Railway promises to be a formidable competitor of both the Norfolk & Western and the Chesapeake & Ohio. It is constructed with such low grades and with such heavy bridges that it will be able, officials of the road state, to haul 4,000 tons of coal in a single train. The road is built through the hills and across the valleys with the purpose of making it as far as possible a straight line, and one that will carry coal at the lowest possible cost.

H. H. Rogers is largely interested in coal fields in West Virginia, and it was chiefly for the purpose of affording an outlet for these that the construction of the road was undertaken. Track has already been laid on a large part of the 443-mile line. The terminal of the line at seaboard reaches the open waters of Hampton Roads. It owns 525 acres at Sewall's Point, which affords it a vast terminal site.

BERLIN TAKES OUR GOLD.

Bulk of the $3,500,000 Engaged Yesterday Going to Germany.

Gold taken from the Assay Office yesterday and engaged for shipment by next Tuesday's steamer amounted to $3,500,000, bringing the total engagements on this movement up to $20,750,000. Of the gold engaged yesterday it is expected that about $2,500,000 will go to Berlin. Part at least of the gold which has already gone out on this movement, although consigned to Paris, has found its way to Berlin.

Of yesterday's gold $2,500,000 was taken by the National City Bank. Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co. engaged $1,500,000 for shipment by Tuesday's steamer.

THE COFFEE MARKET.

Coffee was moderately active yesterday, and after opening unchanged to 5 points lower recovered the loss. The market closed steady at unchanged prices. Sales for the day were reported of about 38,000 bags.

A private cable from Havre reported that French bankers had advised coffee merchants that they would loan on warrants only on the basis of 40f. With the spot month quoted at more than 43f, some thought this influenced the reported decline of ½@¾f. Receipts at the two ports were 14,000 bags, against 57,000 last year and 11,000 two years ago. Jundiahy receipts were 7,000 bags, against none two years ago. Spot coffee was steady; 6⅝c for Rio No. 7.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

S. Hildesheimer, Treasurer of the New York and Honduras Rosario Mining Company, will sail on the Kronprinz Wilhelm next Tuesday for three months' vacation abroad.

The meeting of the Directors of the Sloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron Company scheduled for yesterday to take action on the common dividend was postponed because of lack of a quorum. It will probably be called again for next Tuesday.

The $2,500,000 refunding and extension 5 per cent. bonds of the Union Electric Light and Power Company of St. Louis, recently purchased by N. W. Harris & Co. and offered to investors at 93½, to yield about 5.50 per cent., have all been sold.

Stockholders of the New York Air Brake Company who subscribed at 90 to the new issue of $3,000,000 6 per cent. twenty-year convertible bonds are called upon to pay the second installment of the subscription price between May 15 and May 25.

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

Happenings of a Day in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, May 15.—Money was in good supply and better demand on the market to-day. Discounts were firmer.

The Stock Exchange is marking time from the recent advance. Cheap money and the bringing out of new issues caused realizations under which Consols and other gilt-edged securities yielded fractionally early in the day, but Consols recovered in the afternoon. Home rails and foreigns eased in the absence of support.

American securities started well and attracted fair buying. They went above parity in the forenoon, but irregularity developed later. New York offered stock in the afternoon, prices then eased, and the market finished dull at a fraction over the lowest quotations of the day.

Bar silver steady, 24 3-16d per ounce.

Money, 1¼@1½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2⅛ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for three months' bills is 2⅛ per cent.

PARIS, May 15.—Trading on the Bourse to-day was firm.

Three per cent. rentes, 96 francs 75 centimes for the account.

Exchange on London, 25 francs 11½ centimes for checks.

BERLIN, May 15.—Prices on the Boerse to-day opened firmer on advices from New York and foreign Bourses, but afterward reacted and closed weak.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 41 pfennigs for checks.

Discount rates: Short bills, 4 per cent.; three months' bills, 3⅞ per cent.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

The leading commercial weeklies report a brisker retail trade as a result of warmer and more seasonable weather during the past week.

Dun's Review says:

> Trade conditions are most responsive to the weather at this time of year, and more seasonable temperature brought distinct improvement during the week, especially in retail sales of wearing apparel. Crops have also made good progress. Little net change is noted in manufacturing activities, some plants resuming while idleness was increased elsewhere by strikes. Buyers are assembling at primary markets to attend special sales, and stocks of staple goods are running low. Mercantile collections are more prompt, but transporting conditions are at the least satisfactory point of the year thus far, 19 per cent. of the freight cars being idle, while gross railway earnings in the first week of May were 20.8 per cent. less than a year ago. Bank exchanges at New York for the week were 10.8 per cent. smaller than last year, while at other leading cities there was a decrease of 16.1 per cent.

Bradstreet's says:

> Weather, trade, and crop reports are irregular, and retail and jobbing demand has been of a fluctuating character. There is evident, however, a measurable improvement in the tone of affairs, commercial and industrial, a partial reflection, perhaps, of the better feeling in financial lines, and the belief is growing that the stock market is discounting future trade improvement. The most significant feature in actual trade circles is, perhaps, the wider acceptance of the belief noted in the cotton-goods trade that this branch of trade has seen the bottom as to prices.
>
> Best reports as to the improvement in Fall buying come from New York, Chicago, and St. Louis, while current retail trade reports are best in the Southwest and Northwest. Collections, as a whole, are still backward, but some quite favorable reports as to May collections are heard in important wholesale lines at New York.

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—Occasional rallies took place yesterday, but the general trend was steadily downward. Export demand was very quiet, only 2 loads being reported at outports, but there was a little better cash trade in Western markets. Liverpool closed ⅝ to ⅞d lower, Berlin was ⅝c down, but Budapest closed ⅝ to ¾c higher on dry, hot weather in Hungary. Cash wheat in New York was quoted as follows: No. 2 red, $1.04, in elevator, and $1.07, free on board, afloat, both nominal; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, $1.13¾, and No. 2 hard Winter, $1.12, free on board, afloat.

CORN.—Opening lower yesterday on better weather and liberal Argentine shipments, the market quickly rallied, holding firm, except for a slight reaction near the close. Receipts were moderate at interior points, and no export business was reported. No. 2 corn in New York closed 76c, elevator, and 74c asked, free on board, afloat.

CALLS FOR STRICT ECONOMY

Metz Would Postpone Appropriations for Street Improvements—Blocks Coler's Resolution of Inquiry.

Controller Metz submitted to the Board of Estimate yesterday a statement as to the position of the city with regard to the debt limit. According to the statement, on May 1 the assessed valuation of the real estate of New York was $6,240,480,602, and the legal debt limit $624,048,060.

Against this has to be charged the net funded debt amounting to $562,468,073, a net contract liability of $57,283,374, and an expenditure on lands acquired of $19,930,158, which make up $639,686,606. From this is to be taken $21,782,270, proceeds of the sale of bonds which have not yet been apportioned to any particular purpose, leaving the net estimated margin of borrowing power of the city on May 1 $6,143,724.

However, on June 1 title will vest in the city for the land purchased for the Manhattan and Brooklyn approaches to the Manhattan Bridge, so that this margin must be reduced by their assessed value, which is $2,700,000. Moreover, a number of contracts were awarded on May 11, which have not yet been certified, the approximate value of which is $2,000,000. These two sums must be deducted from the margin, and it is therefore finally reduced to $1,443,724.

The Controller preached the urgent need of economy and moved that no further consideration be given to improvements chargeable against the Street Improvement Fund. He thought it would not be possible to take these up again until July 1 or July 15, by which time it might be hoped that the city would have, through the $45,000,000 increase in the assessed valuations, a margin in the debt limit greater than the cost of the improvements which have already been authorized.

In support of this recommendation the Controller handed to the board a long statement dealing with the Street Improvement Fund from its creation in 1898 to the close of last year. From this it appeared that on Dec. 31 there were assessment bonds outstanding against the fund to the amount of $9,004,129, and the city had advanced to it also from its general funds $11,810,061. The Controller admitted that in some cases the city had not paid its proper share of the cost of improvements, but had left the entire burden to the districts affected, but contended that the chief cause of the condition of the fund was the slowness with which the Borough Presidents had made up their assessment lists from the property owners who had been benefited by the improvements.

He recommended that corporate stock should be issued to pay for the city's share in all improvements, and that no further improvements should be begun except those which the health or the absolute needs of the community demanded until there is a balance in the fund in excess of the cost of those already authorized.

President Haffen of the Bronx objected to this report and declared that his borough had returned to the fund $1,300,000 more than it had received in the last year.

The application of this statement to the prospects of the Fourth Avenue subway in Brooklyn was yet to be made. President Coler offered a resolution calling upon a certain unnamed accountant in the Controller's department, who was said to have taken a different view of the city's position, to attend at the next meeting of the board to present his views. Also, Corporation Counsel Pendleton was invited to attend upon the same occasion, to clear up the meaning of his recent opinion upon the city debt.

This resolution had to be carried unanimously, and as the Mayor began to read the second section, which said:

"Whereas, Owing to the contradictory statements emanating from the Controller's office—"

"I object," said Mr. Metz, and the resolution was defeated.

The Controller was asked after the meeting about the attack upon the method of bookkeeping used by the city which was made by several members of the Savings Bank Association on Thursday.

"There's no attack," he replied. "We know exactly where we stand, as you can see from my statement to-day. We've been for some time putting things into shape, but you can't do everything in a day."

URGES WESTINGHOUSE PLAN.

Circular to Stockholders Points Out Its Advantages—A Warning.

In a circular sent to stockholders of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company yesterday, urging them to come in under the readjustment plan, the statement is made that out of total claims of $4,250,000, representatives of $3,600,000 have subscribed to the plan. A large part of the remaining merchandise creditors have promised agreements, it is announced, and the committee expects that practically all of the merchandise creditors will assent. The circular says:

> The merchandise creditors are willing to support this plan because they believe that under such a readjustment of the company's affairs as it contemplates, the stock of your company will reach par, or better, within the next two years, and thus enable them to realize the full amount of their claims. If this supposition on their part be correct it must certainly follow that your interests will be fully protected and conserved.

The committee concludes with the statement that unless the $6,000,000 of new stock is subscribed it sees no alternative but the sale of the company's property under foreclosure.

CHATHAM NATIONAL BUYS.

Corbin Building Co. Sells Nine-Story Building at Broadway and John St.

Negotiations were closed yesterday for the purchase of the nine-story building at the northeast corner of Broadway and John Street by the Chatham National Bank from the Corbin Building Company, of which J. Rogers Maxwell is President, and the heirs of the Austin Corbin estate.

The property is a leasehold, the land being owned by the Reformed Dutch Church. The plot measures 20 feet on Broadway and 102 feet on John Street, with a rear line of 42 feet. The ground lease was recently renewed for a period of twenty-one years at an annual rental of about $30,000, and carries with it privilege of renewal for an additional twenty-one-year term.

The Chatham National Bank has been the tenant of the ground floor for many years. With the expiration of the leases now held by tenants on the second floor, that part of the building will probably be taken over by the bank and used by some of its departments.

Evansville & Terre Haute Bond Sale.

The Evansville & Terre Haute, which is one of the Rock Island Company lines, has sold, it was learned yesterday, a block of $373,000 general mortgage 5 per cent. bonds to Flower & Co. The sale of these bonds will reimburse the company for expenditures already made. The total authorized issue is $7,000,000, of which a large part is reserved to cover previous issues.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Testimony Must Be Submitted in the Statuary Cases—Other Decisions.

The Board of United States General Appraisers decided yesterday that metal statuary produced by casting cannot be entered at the rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem under the terms of the reciprocity treaty between this country and Germany, but must stand duty at the rate of 45 per cent. as "manufactures of metal."

Judge Waite, who writes the decision for the board, says in part: "The cases have been submitted without any evidence to substantiate the claim in the protest, and there is nothing in the record to warrant a finding that the statuary in question was "wrought by hand" from metal, and hence dutiable at 15 per cent. The decision says that the cases now before the board in the name of John L. Vandiver are clearly distinguishable from cases recently decided by the Federal courts in that there is no evidence that the articles are anything more than ordinary bronzes produced by casting. Taking this view, the board overrules the contention of the importers for a lower duty, and upholds the Government in exacting duty.

General Appraiser McClelland handed down a decision overruling a claim filed by Downing, Judae & Co. of Chicago, it being held that artificial flowers of celluloid are dutiable properly at the rate of 50 per cent. and dutiable as "toys" at only 35 per cent. The action of the customs authorities is upheld.

PROFIT FOR BERLIN BANK.

Jump in Western Maryland First 4s of Nearly Ten Points Yesterday.

Fluctuations of many points occurred yesterday in the price of Western Maryland first 4s on sales of only $55,000 of the bonds. On this light trading the issue rose nearly 10 points from the opening price to 79, dropped back to 73 on the next sale, and closed at 74, against 68¾ at the opening. The limited amount of the bonds offered for sale was held responsible for the violent advance, but Wall Street read into the movement some significance in reference to the recently circulated reports of an impending change in control of the property.

Incidentally yesterday's advance showed a large paper profit to the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, which some time ago bought in at about 53, $3,000,000 of the bonds which were pledged as security for a note issue of the Western Maryland. At yesterday's high price these bonds showed the Deutsche Bank a nominal profit of about $775,000.

The Equitable Trust Company, from which the Western Maryland has also borrowed on its first mortgage bonds bought in the bonds which it held at about 65 and on these too a large profit was shown yesterday.

McINTYRE STILL TOO ILL.

Dr. Dana Says Broker Might Be Safely Questioned Within a Week or Two.

The examination of Thomas A. McIntyre of the suspended Stock Exchange firm of T. A. McIntyre & Co. in the bankruptcy proceedings which are pending in the United States District Court was again postponed yesterday, on the receipt by Judge Hough of a report from Dr. Charles L. Dana that McIntyre was too ill to undergo examination. The hearing was thereupon adjourned until Monday.

Dr. Dana in his letter to Judge Hough states that he visited McIntyre in Miss Allston's sanitarium, in West Sixtieth Street, and examined him in the presence of Drs. Gilday and McPhee.

"I found him in a weak condition physically," said Dr. Dana, "his heart intermittently running between 90 and 160; there was great termor in his hands and feet and cold, moist extremities. In my opinion, it would not be safe for him to be submitted to any but very brief examination by the Commissioner or by counsel. I should think that within a week or two this might be safely done."

J. J. HILL ON THE OUTLOOK.

Everybody Hopeful in the West, He Says, and Crop Conditions Fine.

James J. Hill, Chairman of the Great Northern, who delivered an address on Thursday before the convention of Governors in Washington, returned to this city yesterday. He referred hopefully to the crop outlook in the Northwest, saying:

"Every one is looking forward hopefully to the time when business conditions will resume normal aspects. The crop outlook is good. In some parts of the West the conditions are the most promising in years. In the Northwest the seeding is just being finished, but the conditions under which it has been done are the best in ten years."

Mr. Hill did not care to discuss the general business situation, nor the proposed advance in freight rates.

TRUSTEE FOR A MORSE CO.

Consolidated Arizona Smelting Creditors Meet in Trenton.

The New York and other creditors of the Consolidated Arizona Smelting Company at a meeting in Trenton, N. J., yesterday elected J. Kearny Rice of New Brunswick trustee in bankruptcy. Judge T. V. Boorean and Thomas A. Conway of New Brunswick, N. J., and Howard H. Maxfield of Trenton were appointed appraisers.

C. W. Morse was interested in the flotation of the stock of the Consolidated Arizona Smelting Company and the National Bank of North America advanced funds on paper signed jointly by Morse and the officers of the company. A plan for the rehabilitation of the company has been drawn up, and is largely dependent upon the adjustment of its debt to the bank.

THE SUNDAY TIMES

The Picture Section.

The Salon of the Society of French Artists may always be depended upon to produce at least one canvas that is out of the ordinary in its conception, and generally several. This year's Salon is no exception to the rule, for it contains several paintings that are notable in many ways. To one of these a page of the Picture Section of The Times will be devoted to-morrow. It is a striking canvas by Jean Paul Laurens, entitled "Beethoven." Also in reproduction of Art the Picture Section will include several enjoyable examples of the exhibition by women artists now being held in this city. Other pages of the Picture Section to-morrow will present interesting photographs of the recent outdoor meeting of the Lakewood Country Club, a series of excellent views of the parade of the New York police, photographs of the interior of the home of "the hardest man in the world to see," the Sultan of Turkey; photographs of attractive young women of the stage, photographs showing the results of the recent collision between the American liner St. Paul and the British cruiser Gladiator—and many other pictures wide in their variety, and all of timeliness and popular interest.

Two Brothers Working to Master the Air.

The significance of the experiments which the Wright Brothers have been conducting along the sand dunes of the North Carolina Coast is portrayed in an article which appears in The Times to-morrow. The importance of the test may be best shown in the bare statement that aerial navigation, so long regarded as a fascinating absurdity, seems now to be very nearly a practical reality. There was one great and apparently insurmountable difficulty to be overcome before man could successfully imitate the flight of birds. This has hitherto baffled the ingenuity of man. The article describes this difficulty and tells how these Western inventors have now apparently found a way to overcome it.

Living in New York on $35 Weekly.

The second installment of The Sunday Times's series discussing the problem of living on $35 a week will be read with interest by all who have not pennies to drop in all possible slots. This article takes up the question as to whether it is better for one beginning married life on a stipend of $35 a week to seek to own a home or to live in rented quarters. All wage earners know how vexing that problem is. In the Magazine Section to-morrow both sides of the case are given and thoughtfully discussed.

The New Director of Metropolitan Opera.

Already things have changed within the Metropolitan Opera House. Giulio Gatti-Casazza is installed in Heinrich Conried's old office. The Italian has been at his post for only a week, but he has reached some conclusions. An article in The Sunday Times will record some of the impressions the new director has formed. It will tell, also, of his plans and of his musical convictions. The article will be accompanied by an interesting account of the American operatic invasion of Europe.

What the Japanese Are Doing in Korea.

From Mr. Thomas F. Millard, now sojourning in Korea, comes another letter from that student of Oriental affairs, and in which is described the anomalous conditions which now exist in the land of the erstwhile hermit nation. Although the country is governed by the Japanese, it is not a part of Japan politically. Korea now, Mr. Millard asserts in his letter which appears in The Times to-morrow, is a vassal, stripped of the last vestige of administrative autonomy.

Police Chiefs Tell of Their Adventures.

In the Magazine Section of The Sunday Times some of the best known of the higher rank officers of New York's Police Force recount the incidents in their careers which to them seem most interesting. The reminiscences of these veterans run the gamut of almost every experience that comes to a police officer—tragedy and humor, battles against gangs, the trailing and capturing of crooks, desperate encounters with criminals, and numerous odd and interesting adventures.

Sidelights on Prohibition in the South.

"Prohibition has lessened general and indiscriminate drinking to a very large extent, but it has prohibited nothing but the licensed saloon." This is one of the conclusions reached by a keen observer who has been traveling through the South. His article will appear in The Sunday Times. It will tell of conditions that have followed the passage of prohibition laws by Alabama and Georgia. It is an article full of information of uncommon interest.

THE SUNDAY TIMES IS ALWAYS SOLD OUT EARLY.

The Everyday Side of Gov. Johnson.

The public has been made familiar during the last few months with the political career and the political beliefs of Gov. Johnson of Minnesota. An article in The Sunday Times will approach the interesting Northwesterner from a different standpoint. It will describe the unofficial man and will tell, in the man's own words, what he thinks of everyday life and everyday things. It is an entertaining article about an interesting man.

URGES CITY TO BUY FERRIES.

But Controller Metz Thinks $12,000,000 Too High for Brooklyn Lines.

Daniel F. Cohalan, representing the Brooklyn Ferry Company, had a conference yesterday with Controller Metz to urge the purchase by the city of the seven Brooklyn ferry lines owned by the company. Most of the franchises expired at the beginning of the month, and the others will run out in the Summer.

The company wants the city to pay $12,000,000 for its boats and real estate, but the Controller will not advise the purchase at any such price. He rather favors acquiring the property by condemnation proceedings. Mr. Metz admitted, however, that it was not likely that the ferries could be made to pay, but pointed out that the bridges do not pay. He will draw up a report for presentation to the Board of Estimate next Friday.

SPRING BRINGS CRANKS OUT.

"Mayor's Wife" at City Hall—A Man Wants to Put the Hall on Stilts.

The routine of the Mayor's office was broken twice by cranks yesterday. The first was a shabbily dressed woman, who informed Lieut. Kennell that she was the Mayor's wife; that the affairs of the city were being shockingly neglected, and she was determined to set them right. She used bad language and excitedly waved a cloak. As the Lieutenant rose from his desk to restrain her, she turned and ran into City Hall Park.

The other strange caller was P. C. Curry, who in Mayor Strong's time used to be a frequent visitor. He wants to raise the City Hall upon stilts, and thinks it could be easily done by cutting away the lower story and putting posts underneath, so that women and children may rest in the shade.

He went away contented when Lieut. Kennell promised to see about his scheme.

Vyse, deceased, the heirs and next of kin of E. COOLEY ROSS, deceased, send greeting:

Whereas, James P. Beckwith of the City of New York, has lately applied to the Surrogates' Court of our County of New York, to have a certain instrument in writing bearing date January 8, 1903, relating to both real and personal property duly proved as the last will and testament of E. Cooley Ross, late of the County of New York, deceased.

Therefore you and each of you are cited to appear before the Surrogate of our County of New York, at his office in the County of New York, on the 30th day of June, one thousand nine hundred and eight, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to attend the probate of the said last will and testament.

And such of you as are hereby cited as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In testimony whereof we have caused the seal of the Surrogate's Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto affixed.

Witness Hon. Charles H. Beckett, a Surrogate of our said County of New York, at said County, the 28th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eight.

[Seal] DANIEL J. DOWDNEY,
Clerk of the Surrogate's Court.

MORTGAGE LOANS.

A Period of Sober Reflection

4

It is conceded that the greatest protection to the public in dealing with corporations is publicity. If a company has nothing to conceal it should not object to giving the public full information as to its affairs. The Lawyers Mortgage Company is the only Mortgage Company that tells all about its business—the amount of Guaranteed Mortgages outstanding, the amount of delinquent interest, the number of foreclosures during the year, and every item from which the public can judge for itself the uniform solidity and strength of its mortgage investments.

LONG ISLAND—FOR SALE OR TO LET | LONG ISLAND—FOR SALE OR TO LET

The most beautiful example of Suburban Landscape Gardening around New York is NOW to be seen at
Garden City Estates

It will be time well spent to enjoy an afternoon in the exclusive charm which has made Garden City famous.

Go to-day, or Sunday, taking the Subway at any station in Manhattan in time for the Electric Express leaving the Long Island Railroad Station, Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, at 2 P. M. Our representatives will be at the entrance to trains with free transportation.

Call us up (5222 Gramercy) or write us for book of views or to arrange for transportation for any other train.

GAGE E. TARBELL, Pres.,
Garden City Estates,
100 Flatiron Building, N. Y.

A Notable Offering to Suburban Home Seekers

We offer you plots of half an acre to five acres in our new suburban colony—NOT the stereotyped lot in a geometrical city block. We offer beautifully wooded, rolling country, laid out as a picturesque park—NOT the commonplace straight and level street, with its invariable cement sidewalks, curbs and rows of saplings. We offer every advantage of the real country within 45 minutes' ride of Manhattan, with excellent train service.

The land lies in the heart of the highest, healthiest and most desirable part of the Long Island North Shore, and the colony is, in our judgment, destined to eclipse the most notable of our previous undertakings in high class suburban realty.

We shall announce the name and exact location of this Park on Sunday, May 24th. Until then we offer TO THOSE WHO KNOW US first choice of sites, upon exceptionally favorable terms.

PROPOSALS.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT, 9TH JUdicial District, Westchester County.—KENSICO RESERVOIR, Section No. 10.

Notice of application for the appointment of Commissioners of Appraisal.

Public notice is hereby given that it is the intention of the Corporation Counsel of The City of New York to make application to the Supreme Court of the State of New York for the appointment of Commissioners of Appraisal under Chapter 724 of the Laws of 1905, as amended. Such application will be made to the Supreme Court at a Special Term thereof to be held in and for the 9th Judicial District at the Court House in the Village of White Plains, Westchester County, N. Y., on the 20th day of June, 1908, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard. The object of such application is to obtain an order of the Court appointing three disinterested and competent freeholders, one of whom shall reside in the County of New York and at least one of whom shall reside in the county where the real estate hereinafter described is situated, to act as Commissioners of Appraisal under said act and discharge all the duties conferred by the said act and the acts amendatory thereof upon such Commissioners of Appraisal for the purpose of providing an additional supply of pure and wholesome water for the City of New York.

The real estate sought to be taken or affected is situated in the Town of Mount Pleasant, County of Westchester and State of New York.

The following is a description of the real estate to be acquired in fee, together with a reference to the date and place of filing of the map.

All those certain pieces or parcels of real estate situated in the Town of Mount Pleasant, County of Westchester and State of New York, shown on a map entitled "Southern Aqueduct Department. Section No. 10. Board of Water Supply of the City of New York. Map of real estate situated in the Town of Mount Pleasant, County of Westchester and State of New York, to be acquired by the City of New York under the provisions of Chapter 724 of the Laws of 1905, as amended, for the construction of Kensico Reservoir and appurtenances, from Barrett St. to the vicinity of High St.," which map was filed in the office of the Register of the County of Westchester, at White Plains, New York, on the 6th day of April, 1908, as Map Number 1792, which parcels are bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at the southwest corner of Parcel No. 796 at the point of intersection of the centre lines of Pleasant Place and Commercial Avenue, in the northerly line of real estate section No. 9, Southern Aqueduct Department, the map of which section was filed in the office of the Register of the County of Westchester, at White Plains, N. THAW SAYS INSANITY DEFENSE WAS CLEVER

But He Was Certainly Sane Half a Minute After Shooting Stanford White.

MAY TAKE STAND TO-DAY

Thaw's Own Version of the Killing and What Led Up to It—Sorry Now for Evelyn Thaw.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 15.—Harry K. Thaw's own story of the murder of Stanford White, the incidents leading up to it, and the alleged sham of his plea of insanity on both trials were brought out to-day from a witness for the people in opposition to the release of Thaw from the State Asylum for the Criminal Insane at Matteawan, and from an expert alienist employed in his behalf in his fight for freedom.

Thaw's counsel practically closed his case yesterday, reserving as his principal witness Dr. George W. Jacoby of New York to follow in rebuttal Dr. Amos F. Baker, Assistant Medical Director at Matteawan.

It is the first time that Thaw's observations on the conduct of his trial, his repudiation of his own witnesses, and his statements to experts in his case have been made public.

"If I was insane at all," he told Dr. Baker, "I was insane just a minute before I killed White and sane again a half minute after."

"Why did you do it?" Dr. Baker asked Thaw at Matteawan, and during the first thirty days of observation of the prisoner. Dr. Baker read from carefully prepared notes.

"He answered," read the doctor, "that meeting Stanford White on Madison Square Roof Garden was like being suddenly thrust upon the edge of a steep precipice with the inclination to jump. 'The irresistible impulse to kill him came upon me,' he told me. 'There was my wife on the roof of the building in a room of which White had ruined her. There was White. I saw White glaring at me. I went to him, drew my revolver, and shot him three times.'"

Dr. Baker said that Thaw told him that he was sane, and that the understanding with his counsel was that he would be in Matteawan for thirty days for observation and then a paper of release as cured would be signed and he would go free.

Thaw Insisted He Was Sane.

Dr. Baker said that at the end of the thirty days Thaw insisted on the certificate of recovery being signed. In an interview with Dr. Baker on March 2 he, after again insisting that he was sane, and should not be held longer in the asylum, related the facts which occurred just prior to the tragedy, showing his full knowledge of every event of the afternoon previous and of every event on the night on the roof garden, before, during, and after the shooting, fully repudiating all of the contentions made on his behalf during his two trials.

"I played cards at the club in the afternoon," Dr. Baker testified Thaw told him, "and then went home to the Hotel Lorraine. There I got Mrs. Thaw and we went to Martin's for dinner. While there my wife trembled and informed me that White was in the place. She always trembled at the sight of the man. We went to the Madison Square Roof Garden after dinner."

Thaw then related practically what was told in detail by the witnesses for the people at both trials. He said that he left his seat to go to the lavatory. He found it on the roof, and James Clinch Smith talked with him and went to the gallery to look over the audience to see if there was any one he knew present. He saw no one, and did not then see White. He left the gallery and later beheld White. He went to him and killed him, pumping into his brain two bullets and firing a third as White sat with his arm resting on the table, then sliding as life left him and as his body fell to the floor.

"I cannot account for my rash act," he told Dr. Baker, "and counsel has advised me not to try to explain."

Dr. Jacoby, the expert for Thaw, told of his various examinations made in Matteawan and at the jail here up to yesterday. He started these examinations on Feb. 10, telling Thaw that he wanted to make an absolutely fair report, and wanted him to be absolutely free in his confidences. Thaw told him that he would be free in his expressions, and the witness said that he had every reason to believe that Thaw had withheld nothing from him.

"He told me," said Dr. Jacoby, "that he first met Evelyn Nesbit in the Autumn of 1901. Once prior to that time, he said, he had met White, having gone to a dinner he gave. He said: 'When I learned that Evelyn had been one of his victims my hate for White began and grew. On Dec. 24, 1903, I heard that he had been looking for me with a pistol. I thought that White would kill me at the first opportunity, and I always carried a revolver when in New York, but not outside of the town. Once when in the West I ran over a rattlesnake on a walk and killed it with my umbrella.'

"Mr. Thaw told me," continued Dr. Jacoby, "that he could not explain why he had killed White. It could not have been the duel scene in the play on the garden he told me.

"'But I can't explain the impulse. I never felt any remorse for killing him. I think that is strange.'"

Insanity Defense Repudiated.

Then came the repudiation of the defense of insanity. Dr. Jacoby, frequently referring to his notes, said that Thaw had told him that the letter of his old childhood teacher to his mother, hinting at fear for his condition of mind, which was introduced by Mr. Littleton at the last trial, was the result of a great homesickness. He said that he dreamed about seeing bears, and as a child was afraid and wanted to go home.

The story of another old school teacher, Koehler, that he had used him as an example of the rich man's son, was the result of the publication of a story about him that he had given a fifty-thousand-dollar dinner. Thaw told the alienist that Koehler's attention to him was caused by the notoriety and that his story, told in his behalf to prove him insane at the second trial, was not true.

"Thaw also explained to me about his disinheritance," Dr. Jacoby testified. "He said that one reason for his being so much away from home was that he and his father could never agree and were always arguing. He did not expect anything in his father's will, but was satisfied, as he was assured that it would be made all right in the end.

"I talked with Thaw about his love for music, and he said that he did not have such a good ear for music, as he could not go home from the theatre and play an air he had heard the same night. He did like music, and had gone to one of the music festivals at Bayreuth, but explained that he had gone there more out of curiosity than anything else, although he admitted that he loved music more after this visit. He talked with me about the passion play at Oberammergau, and showed an unusual intelligence in the discussion."

Dr. Jacoby said that they were talking of things he knew of himself, and he thought that Thaw's conversation was clear, highly intelligent at times, and that he had much information on the subject.

Smoked and Drank Moderately.

"I asked him as to his habits of life," the alienist continued. "He told me that he smoked and drank in moderation. I asked him if he went on sprees, and Thaw objected to this. He said that sometimes he drank too much for his own good, but if he went to bed full he got up sober the next morning.

"He told me that he knew very well what he was doing when he went to the ball in Monte Carlo, when he was down with a fever. The fever had been reduced, and he thought it safe to go to the ball, and he went despite objections."

From Monte Carlo witnesses were brought for the last trial to testify to this incident, to establish a case of insane conduct to help establish Thaw's freedom from guilt in the slaying of White.

"He told me also that the physician who came here from Rome," testified Dr. Jacoby, "was a good, fine physician, but knew nothing about him. He denied emphatically that the physician who testified to a fit of insanity on a train between Chicago and New York had treated him. He said that he had a half nephew living in the South who went on sprees, and who would use his name, and that probably this half nephew was the man treated by the witness physician. He told me also that the story of a spell of insanity in London was based on the results of a case of ptomaine poisoning, and nothing else."

Dr. Jacoby declared that he found Thaw absolutely logical, clearheaded, unusually intelligent, fully cognizant of things going on, well versed in the news of the day as a man of education and intelligence might be expected to show, and that his attitude toward every one was calm and composed.

"He gave during my investigations," said Dr. Jacoby, "no evidence of hallucinations or delusions, nor did I find any trace of paranoia."

Dr. Jacoby said that he broached the matter of Thaw's wife's conduct since the starting of the annulment proceedings. He said that Thaw replied that he was sorry, for he thought that Evelyn had been misled.

"He told me," said the alienist, "that if he was released he would go to Europe and live as quietly as he could. I think that he is sane. I admit that the letters, will, and codicil put in evidence here are unusual, but I find nothing in them to show his present insanity or why he should not be permitted to go at large."

Says His Lawyers Were Clever.

That was the story of the first alienist for Thaw, backing up the story of the star witness for Mr. Jerome, Dr. Baker, in so far as Dr. Baker's story related to the prisoner's own story of the events leading up to and the act which ended the life of White and landed Thaw among the criminal insane. Dr. Baker's examinations also gave Thaw's repudiation of the witnesses who saved him from the electric chair. To Dr. Baker Thaw told the same tale of alleged misconstruction and exaggeration by the witnesses for his defense. He denied each of the instances of lunatical conduct abroad, giving the same explanations to Dr. Baker as he gave to Dr. Jacoby.

"Insanity was the only plea to interpose to save my life," he told Dr. Baker, "and my lawyers and physicians were very clever."

To Dr. Baker he said that it was in 1901 he learned of White and a coterie of friends seeking young girls, among whom had been Evelyn Nesbit. Dr. Baker said that Thaw told him that he complained to Miss Helen Gould, telling her what was going on, and that she referred him to President Baldwin of the Long Island Railroad, to a Dr. Strong, and to Anthony Comstock. He also declared that he had reported to Comstock and had hired detectives to trap the men doing these evil things, but that they had been unable to trap them. He said that these same men would like to have him declared insane. "But what insanity I may have had," Dr. Baker says he declared, "began one minute before and ended half a minute after the tragedy on the Garden roof."

Thaw seemed touched when his wife was referred to during the testimony. He bowed his head when Dr. Baker said that when he asked him about his wife he replied "in a sorrowful voice 'that he had done all he could to lift her up, and could do no more.'"

Ordered 200 Chocolate Eclairs.

The only actual acts of Thaw while in Matteawan which came under the observation of Dr. Baker, and which he cited as evidence of an abnormal mental condition, consisted of his ordering 200 chocolate eclairs for the attendants without asking permission. The eclairs arrived at the asylum, and Thaw was told that he could not buy things for attendants. Again Thaw bought fifty Hymn Books for the prisoners, and Easter lilies for them on Good Friday. Thaw also declined to permit the taking of his picture, saying that he acted on the advice of counsel. Dr. Baker said that one of his counsel when he called left the odor of tobacco smoke in Thaw's room, and that he was remonstrated with time and again for breaking the rules. Finally this member of counsel gave his word that he would not smoke there again, but on his next visit the smoke was reported once more, and the counsel said that he had not smoked, but Thaw had. This, said Dr. Baker, along with the fact that Thaw had tipped money to one of the attendants caused Thaw to have the restrictions of the place brought tighter around him.

Dr. Baker said that Thaw's gait was a sliding gait. He carried his chest well out, and had a domineering eye. He smiled sillily and condescendingly on any one who approached him, and was egotistical and peevish. Dr. Baker said that he knew the manner and peculiarities of the insane, and that he believed that Thaw was insane now, and it would be a menace to the community to turn him out of Matteawan.

Believed Thaw a Paranoiac.

Dr. Baker declared positively that he believed Thaw was a paranoiac, and pointed out that in the cases of many paranoiacs turned out of Matteawan disaster had pursued them.

Mr. Jerome asked Dr. Baker if he had ever heard of one paranoiac aiding another in getting out of Matteawan. The doctor did remember such a case.

Dr. Carlos B. MacDonald was put on the stand as the last of the direct witnesses for Mr. Jerome this afternoon. He qualified as an expert and gave as his opinion that Thaw was a victim of paranoia, basing that opinion on the Longfellow and Comstock letters, the will and codicil, and his personal examinations of his presence and demeanor in court.

In the cross-examination of Dr. MacDonald, Thaw's lawyer, J. G. Graham, was assisted by Dr. Britton D. Evans, who arrived in court this afternoon. Dr. Evans, the originator of the "brainstorm" theory of the first trial, took a seat directly behind Mr. Graham and the questions began to fly thick and fast from his lips.

"You expect to be paid for coming here," began Mr. Graham, on taking up the cross-examination.

"To save time," Mr. Jerome interjected, "I'll inform the court that Dr. MacDonald will be paid $15 an hour for his services, and that as long as he is here it costs New York County 25 cents a minute."

Evidence of Delusions in Letters.

Dr. MacDonald said that he found abundant evidence of paranoiacal delusions in the letters and the will and codicil. Whether there had been fact upon which to base Thaw's provisions in his will and codicil for the prosecution of certain men, he thought that the provisions as written were evidences of paranoiacal delusions. He did not believe that Thaw could have hoped to have avenged the women or stopped such practices in the way he had outlined.

Mr. Jerome closed his case with Dr. MacDonald, and the rebuttal of the relator's case was started with Dr. Vladimar Sillo, of 353 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York. Dr. Sillo attended Thaw as personal physician in the Tombs and at Matteawan. He said that Thaw asked after the health of his wife, whose physician he was, and also about his mother's health. On last Christmas Thaw sent him a rare copy of the autobiography of Benjamin Franklin, bought in London. He said that when he thanked Thaw for the gift Thaw told him of Franklin's quaint humor, and said that he believed he would enjoy the book.

Dr. Sillo said that Thaw expressed to him his dissatisfaction with the conduct of his first trial under Delphin M. Delmas. He told Dr. Sillo that he had every confidence in Mr Littleton, that he did not know what he was doing when he killed White. During a visit at Matteawan Thaw told him, he testified, that he thought it ridiculous that his wife should sue the proprietor of the Hotel Knickerbocker for ejecting her and E. R. Thomas. Dr. Sillo said that he expressed his sorrow for her, and declared that he had done all he could for her. He said that he also referred to Jerome, but always in terms of one who would refer to a distinguished gentleman.

Chaplain Thought Thaw Rational.

The Rev. Luke J. Evers, Chaplain for the Catholics in the Tombs, testified in rebuttal as the next witness. He testified that Thaw sent for him on several occasions to talk with him about prisoners who had entered pleas when he thought they could have done better by standing trial. Thaw seemed to think the prisoners to have been ill-advised in the matter. He also complained about heavy sentences which several other prisoners got. He said that he thought Thaw quite rational, judging from the conversations he had with him.

The Rev. John J. Wade, the Protestant Chaplain at the Tombs, testified that he had frequently talked with Thaw and had found him surprisingly well informed on the new Presbyterian Prayer Book and the origin of the prayers. He said that Thaw helped many of the poor prisoners, and asked his advice in this work.

"What did he say about Delmas?" asked Mr. Jerome of the minister.

"He said that Mr. Delmas showed himself to be a jackass."

Mr. Jerome brought out at the cross-examination that Mr. Wade thought Thaw mentally unbalanced on his first visit to him. For Thaw's side, Mr. Wade said that this effect was not noticeable after the first visit and that Thaw impressed him as being rational.

Thaw May Take the Stand.

Mr. Graham, counsel for Thaw, said that he believed that Thaw would be put on the stand before the end of the hearing of the habeas corpus proceedings. Thaw went to his bed in Sheriff Bob Chanler's quarters in the jail to-night much disturbed. If he does take the stand he will have to undergo a cross-examination that may last for more than a day's session of court.

Court adjourned at 9:30 to-night until 9 to-morrow morning.

Drs. Hirsch and Diefendorf, alienists, arrived here to-night at the call of Mr. Jerome. They will be put on the stand in sur-rebuttal if the defense should close its rebuttal to-morrow. If the case is not closed to-morrow night it will have to be carried over until Justice Morschauser finishes his equitey term of court at White Plains.

STEEL TRUST MAKES CEMENT.

Starts $1,000,000 Plant In Opposition to Makers Who Squeezed on Rates.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 15.—After a quarrel of several years with manufacturers of cement on the ground that overcharges were being made the United States Steel Corporation has embarked in the manufacture of cement itself. To-day there was put in operation at Homestead a plant costing $1,000,000, and which will have a capacity of 3,000,000 barrels a year. It is understood that the corporation intends to invade the cement market against cement manufacturers who have been squeezing them hard on rates.

STOWAWAYS ESCAPE BY PICKING A LOCK

Three Japanese Get Away from the Bark Lawhill and Capt. Jarvis Mourns.

LEAVE STRANGE SIGN BEHIND

Two Crossed Daggers and Burned-Out Candles—Captain Must Find Them or Pay $1,500 Fine.

Three Japanese stowaways brought to this port from Yokohama on the British bark Lawhill are missing, and the immigration officials are holding Capt. Jarvis responsible for their disappearance.

When the Lawhill arrived here a few days ago the presence on board of three Japanese stowaways was duly reported. It was decided that the stowaways should be kept on board, and later transferred to the steamer Narragansett for deportation to England. The only ones who objected to this plan were the Japanese, and they picked the lock of the room in which they were prisoners and escaped into the night. They appeared on the ship's manifest as Hanaka, Oshima, and Tanaka. They seemed to be experienced sailormen.

When Chia, the Chinese steward, carried dinner for the Japanese on Thursday night he found that the room was empty. The men had picked the lock and escaped. In the centre of the floor lay two crossed daggers and three small partly burned candles. The skipper, not believing in signs, was inclined to think that the men had left their knives carelessly behind them when they went away. But some of the crew "saw signs" in the knives and candles. Searching parties from the ship are now looking for the missing stowaways, and the skipper will give $100 for their return, as he must pay a fine of $500 for each one if they are not found.

Hanaka was found under a lot of spare sails, Oshima was dug out from under a pile of potatoes, and Tanaka was discovered near the end of the bowsprit. The men, according to the crew, vowed they would get ashore in America in spite of the immigration laws, and declared they would make trouble if they did not get away.

Capt. Jarvis cannot understand why the Japanese should leave $21.50 due to each for their enforced work as sailors behind them when they knew that if they were sent to England they could get a return trip as seamen and land unmolested here.

ADMIRAL SPERRY COMMANDS.

Atlantic Fleet Is Reorganized—Lepers Ask to See It.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 15.—Rear Admiral Charles Stillman Sperry, who was one of the American delegates to the Peace Conference at The Hague, assumed command to-day of the strongest force of first-class fighting ships assembled in the history of the Nation. Rear Admiral Charles M. Thomas hauled down his flag at 10:40 A. M. from the truck of the Connecticut, and ten minutes later Admiral Sperry was received on board the flagship with the salutes and other naval honors befitting his position.

When Admiral Sperry took command the reorganization of the fleet immediately was carried into effect. Admiral Emery transferred his flag from the Georgia to the Louisiana, the new flagship of the second squadron. Capt. Richard Wainwright, on the Georgia, took command of the second division. Capt. Schroeder assumed command of the fourth division on the Wisconsin.

Advices from Honolulu say that a request has come from the leper settlement of Molokai that when the fleet arrives there from San Francisco the vessels shall sail close enough to the shore so that they may be seen from the settlement.

ART STUDENTS AT PLAY.

Big Audience at a Novel Show in New York School Studios.

The students of the New York School of Art combined fun and business and turned their cleverness to profit last night by an entertainment at the studio rooms of the school, Eightieth Street and Broadway, the proceeds of which will be used in defraying the expenses of the school's exhibit at the International Congress of Art Teachers to be held in London this Summer. The collection of the efforts of the students which will be sent to London has already been prepared and is at present on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum.

The entertainment last night included a country fair, side shows, fakes, fakirs and freaks and a vaudeville show, which apparently amused the performers more than the audience.

Miss Vander Hoof, winner of last year's Composition Scholarship, sold chances at 2 cents on the "Only Tee-Hee Bird" in captivity, which looked and spoke suspiciously like a common garden duck. Mr. Crawford, winner of the last Night Glass Scholarship, and Miss Pendleton, winner of the honorable mention in the Illustration Class, posed as midgets with most of their bodies concealed in dry goods boxes. Mr. Brown, scholarship student in the Kuhn Illustration Class, in many rings, pink silk, and a marvelously Marcelled wig, toyed with a box full of real snakes. There were many others just as freaky.

UNIONS OBJECT TO PEARSONS.

Central Federation Protests Against Awarding Them Aqueduct Contract.

Strong opposition to awarding the contract for the construction of the Wallkill Valley siphon of the Catskill Aqueduct to the English firm of S. Pearson & Son was expressed yesterday to Mayor McClellan by a delegation from the Central Federated Union. The firm sent in the lowest of the four bids received, $3,305,000, and it is expected that they will be awarded the contract.

The labor leaders contended that this bid showed that the English firm intended to employ only the cheapest kind of labor. They told the Mayor that the firm was very unfair toward its employes, and that in its work on the Pennsylvania tunnels there had been a number of men killed and scores injured. Moreover, they alleged that the firm was in the habit of evading the contract labor law by importing men from Europe.

The Mayor referred the committee to John A. Bensel, President of the Board of Water Supply, in whose hands the contract is at present.

City Must Pay for Auto Race Death.

A jury in the Supreme Court of Richmond, S. I., found a verdict of $10,250 yesterday in favor of Mrs. Elizabeth Featherson of Seventh Avenue, New Brighton, the widow of Andrew Featherson, who was killed on May 31, 1902, when an automobile in a road race under the auspices of the Automobile Club of America ran wild, and struck Featherson. Mrs. Featherson sued the city for $50,000 damages.

Rivington St. Elevated Station Stays.

The public Service Commission refused yesterday the application made by east side associations to move the Rivington Street Station on the Second Avenue elevated line to Delancey Street.

BAD OUTLOOK FOR TRANSFERS

Judge Lacombe's Long Ride for 5 Cents Augurs Ill for the Bronx.

Arguments were heard yesterday by Judge Lacombe in the United States Circuit Court on the petition of Frederick W. Whitridge, as receiver for the Union Railway Company, to abolish the transfer system now in operation between the Union, Yonkers, and Westchester Electric Railroad Companies.

The petition states that the Union Railway Company is under no contract or obligation to exchange transfers with the two roads named, and that to continue to do so is inimical to its interests. The petition among other things says:

"The abolition of transfers may cause considerable public inconvenience, but the public has the power to avoid it."

Receiver Whitridge says that the Union road runs a line over the White Plains Road to Mount Vernon and over the Webster Avenue route to the Mount Vernon station of the New York, New Haven & Hartford road. The Westchester road runs its cars down the White Plains Road to its terminus at Fifteenth Street, Williamsbridge, to the Bedford Park Station, and over the Union Railway tracks to West Farms. These the receiver wishes to discontinue.

In respect to the Yonkers Road Receiver Whitridge proposes to discontinue running cars on the Webster Avenue line of the Bronx River Road to Yonkers, and thence to the Harlem Station in West Mount Vernon, also the line southward from McLean Avenue to Bedford Park.

The petition further states that it is proposed to discontinue the sale of transfer tickets with the Manhattan Elevated. The reason given, besides the unprofitableness, is the opportunity such a sale of transfers gives for fraud in their purchase and sale by individuals.

Herbert J. Bickford, counsel for Receiver Whitridge, after presenting the petition, stated that one-third of all the passengers carried by the Union Railway Company now are carried on transfers, which are valueless.

The opposition to Receiver Whitridge's petition included Charles E. Otis, Yonkers corporation counsel; Leverett F. Crumb for the receiver of the Yonkers Railway, and representatives of Pelham, Bronxville, Mount Vernon, New Rochelle, and the Westchester Electric Railway, and the North Side Board of Trade. Mr. Crumb said that the abolition of transfers might result in the forfeiture of the franchise because of the breaking of agreements made with the city and town authorities north of the Harlem.

Judge Lacombe gave the protestants until Friday next to file papers. In doing so he told of a circuitous trolley trip he took a few years ago from the Bronx through Westchester County as far as Yonkers and back, saying the ride was eighteen miles long, and by means of transfers he made it for a single five-cent fare.

"If that condition still prevails," remarked Judge Lacombe, "I don't wonder at all at the roads being in the hands of receivers."

VACUUM CLEANER CO. FAILS.

Hasn't Been Making Expenses Lately—W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., a Director.

Judge Ward of the United States Circuit Court has appointed Charles W. Gould, a lawyer of 2 Wall Street, receiver for the Vacuum Cleaner Company, a New Jersey corporation, with offices at 425 Fifth Avenue, and branches in various cities, on application of Ewing & Ewing, creditors for $2,500. Mr. Gould's bond was fixed at $100,000.

The company was incorporated Jan. 31, 1905, with a capital stock of $1,060,000, to manufacture vacuum cleaning apparatus and machinery and to work the same. The entire capital stock was employed in the acquisition of patents and the business formerly conducted by David T. Kenney, who became President of the company. He resigned on Nov. 11, and was succeeded by William L. Dechant. The Directors include William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Henry B. Hollins.

Heretofore the company has done a large business, but for some time past the earnings have been insuffiicent to pay operating expenses, many obligations are past due, creditors have been pressing for payment, and the officers could not raise any more money to meet its obligations. The company has forty contracts on hand, which it is thought ought to realize $25,000 profit if the business is kept going. The company has portable cleaning apparatus in Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Chicago, and St. Louis.

On Dec. 23 the company gave notes to various persons for money loaned to the amount of $152,290, payable Dec. 23, 1908, and were secured by a mortgage on the real and personal property of the company to the New York Trust Company as trustee.

The total liabilities of the company are $290,315, of which $210,000 are on notes and $80,315 to 230 creditors for work, labor, and materials. The total assets are $400,000, of which $200,000 are in this city.

In the trade it is said that some of the company's patents expired a few months ago, and since then a number of rival concerns have started in the business.

BREAK WITH HOLMES PATROL.

West Side Residents Objected to Paying More for Night Watchmen.

Because the rates were too high for the service, as they allege, residents of the west side from Seventy-sixth to Seventy-ninth Street, between Central Park and Amsterdam Avenue, have ceased to subscribe to the Holmes Protective Patrol system, and the association has withdrawn its patrolmen from that district. Many of the residents have gone in for burglary insurance, others have clubbed together and hired private watchmen of their own.

On the other hand the manager of the Holmes patrol, at the concern's headquarters in 20 Cortlandt Street, told a TIMES reporter yesterday that the company had withdrawn its patrolmen because the residents had expected too much service for their money. The manager said the residents wanted a patrolman on each block for $1.50 per month for each resident, and that because of this demand for more men the patrol had been compelled to raise the rate to about $2 to $2.50 per month. The subscribers to the system protested at this, said the manager, so the patrolmen were withdrawn.

"We have also withdrawn our patrolmen from the east side in the Rivington, Ridge, and Clinton Street districts," said the manager. "Many of the Hebrew merchants in the district moved and others closed up their businesses, which made it unprofitable to continue the patrol system any longer. But this does not mean that our patrolmen are out of employment, as we are opening up two fresh districts for every one that is closed."

DUNNE QUITS HIS JOB, BREAKING WITH COLER

Brooklyn Commissioner Voted for McCarren Man and His Chief Didn't Like It.

HEFFERNAN TAKES HIS PLACE

As Head of Department of Public Works Dunne Got $6,000 a Year—His Secretary Also Resigns.

As a result of friction with Borough President Bird S. Coler, Commissioner of Public Works Desmond Dunne of Brooklyn abruptly resigned his $6,000 a year office yesterday. While it had been reported that Mr. Dunne contemplated retiring from the place, his sudden resignation came as a surprise to local politicians. John A. Heffernan, Secretary to President Coler, is to succeed Mr. Dunne.

Though both President Coler and Mr. Dunne assert that the resignation of the latter was due to Mr. Dunne's desire to devote more time to his private business, it has been believed for some time that the relations between the two have not been harmonious. Mr. Dunne has an extensive advertising business, and is also largely interested in real estate enterprises. Because of his large private business interests there was much surprise when he accepted the office of Commissioner of Public Works. Mr. Dunne has not been active politically, but it is said that he has not entirely indorsed the political course pursued by Mr. Coler of late, although he is not a McCarren man.

An indication of this was Mr. Dunne's vote on the question of the election of a county jail physician. When the matter came up for a vote before the Aldermen and other city officials Mr. Dunne was delegated by Mr. Coler to vote for him. To the surprise of Mr. Coler, Mr. Dunne voted for Dr. Richard Kevin, Senator McCarren's candidate. He explained that Dr. Kevin was a personal friend of his.

There is also said to have been friction between the Borough President and the Commissioner of Public Works over certain affairs of the borough government, their ideas not being in accord as to certain improvements. Mr. Dunne is also said to have become disgruntled over the retirement of Edward D. Candee as Assistant Commissioner of Public Works.

While it was announced at the time that Candee had "resigned of his own accord," it was believed that Mr. Coler wanted his place for William E. Melody, one of the district leaders who bolted the standard of McCarren just before the Fall primaries to join the Coler-Shevlin-Flaherty combination. It is a fact that Melody was appointed by President Coler to succeed Candee. Mr. Candee is a close personal friend of Mr. Dunne.

The abruptness of Commissioner Dunne's resignation caused surprise even among the officials at the Borough Hall. When Mr. Dunne reached his office yesterday he learned that Mr. Coler was at a meeting of the Board of Estimate in Manhattan. Without waiting for Mr. Coler to return Mr. Dunne sent his resignation to him in Manhattan. Accompanying the resignation of Mr. Dunne was that of his secretary, John Muller, who received a salary of $3,000 a year.

John A. Heffernan, who has been picked by Mr. Coler to succeed Mr. Dunne, was Borough Secretary under Borough President Martin W. Littleton, and his work in that office led Mr. Coler to appoint him as his secretary when he succeeded Mr. Littleton. Mr. Heffernan and Mr. Coler are the editors of Coler's Bulletin, a weekly publication.

BLACK HANDERS SENTENCED.

Two Italians Caught Demanding Money Sent to Prison.

Judge Crain in General Sessions disposed of two Black Hand cases yesterday. He sentenced Camelo Di Marco, convicted of blackmail, to State Prison for not less than three and not more than four years, and Christopher La Biccolo, who had robbed Luigi Polliatta at the point of a revolver, to State Prison for not less than four years and not more than six. Both had written letters demanding money, threatening violence if it was refused.

JUNE.

By HARRISON S. MORRIS.

WHEN the bubble moon is young,
Down the sources of the breeze,
Like a yellow lantern hung
In the tops of blackened trees,
There is promise she will grow
Into beauty unforetold,
Into all unthought-of gold.
Heigh ho!

When the Spring has dipped her foot,
Like a bather, in the air,
And the ripples warm the root
Till the little flowers dare,
There is promise she will grow
Sweeter than the Springs of old,
Fairer than was ever told.
Heigh ho!

But the moon of middle night,
Risen, is the rounded moon;
And the Spring of budding light
Eddies into just a June.
Ah, the promise—was it so?
Nay, the gift was fairy gold;
All the new is over-old.
Heigh ho!

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

THE Executive Committee charged with the carrying out of the plan for the erection of a World's Shakespeare Memorial in London has issued a statement. By direction of the General Committee the form of the memorial must be "that of an architectural monument including a statue." The competition for the design is now being arranged for. It is expected that the monument will be erected by 1916, the tercentenary of Shakespeare's death. If any sum remains over and above the amount required for the monument it will be applied "to the purpose best calculated to promote the dramatic presentation and literary appreciation of Shakespeare's work." This provision—though it contemplates a condition which is not likely to arise—seems to look toward a national theatre. It is known that the organizers of the Shakespeare Memorial plan were loath to abandon the idea of a theatre. The statement of the Executive Committee says that "those who were responsible for the decision arrived at were largely influenced by the fact that, although the matter had been under discussion for many years, no workable scheme for a theatre national in the ordinary sense of the term had been accepted by those able to appreciate the difficulties of the problem. The late Sir Henry Irving estimated that a capital of £1,000,000 would be necessary. The proposal for a national theatre appeared to be fraught with so many elements of controversy that the originators of the Shakespeare Memorial Movement, who had set first among their aims a permanent memorial to serve as the token of a world-wide homage to Shakespeare, came to the unanimous decision that the memorial should be an architectural and symbolical monument. At the same time, in the Special Committee's report, the idea of a Shakespeare theatre, 'for the furtherance of dramatic art and literature,' was singled out from the various proposals for future consideration as a possible subsidiary project, if the Shakespeare Memorial Fund permitted."

An early prose work of Coleridge has just come to light. It consists of an article in the form of a letter signed "S. T. C.," and was elicited by an attack on Dr. E. L. Fox, who was the head of an insane asylum near Bristol and a prominent member of the anti-Ministerial party of Bristol. It is a pamphlet consisting of title page (verso blank) and seven pages of letterpress. The title page runs:

> An | Answer | to | 'A Letter | to | Edward Long Fox, M. D.' | [Motto:] This is the Patriot's meed! | Be he as pure as is the Mountain Snow, | He shall not 'scape the wrongs of Calumny. | Bristol: | Sold by all the Booksellers. | Price Two-pence.

No date is given, but the pamphlet must have appeared soon after the publication (Dec. 11, 1795,) of the letter which called it forth. The article is published in full in The Athenaeum of May 2. It is of small interest now except as to furnish further illustration of Coleridge's ponderous style. Perhaps its best passage is the one with which it closes:

> The only writer among you, "whose name does not disgrace the page of an opponent," learnt the discipline of genius in our corps. At the sacred flames which rise from the altar of Freedom, he kindled that torch with which he has since endeavoured to set fire to her temple. I never read Edmund Burke's letter without receiving a lesson of humiliation and of dignity. This magnificent Mausoleum, in which he has interred his honest fame, is indeed one of the wonders of the world. Peace attend his declining age! and when he departs from us the worst punishment I wish him for all the excesses he has committed is that he may be appointed under-porter to St. Peter, and be obliged to open the gates of Heaven to Fayette, Brissot, Roland, and Condorcet!

Mr. Greg has exploded a bomb in the camp of Shakespeare collectors in an article published in The Library "On Certain False Dates in Shakespeare Quartos." Mr. Greg contends that four of the editions supposed to have been printed in Shakespeare's lifetime were reprints, dating from 1619, issued by Thomas Pavier, an unscrupulous book dealer. Mr. Greg's arguments are declared to carry complete conviction. His chief point is founded on an investigation of the paper employed, and especially of its water-marks. It seems that any stock of paper with any given water-marks must have been made within a year. The time it takes to exhaust this stock cannot, of course, be absolutely determined; but it is safe to assume that any given stock of paper is half consumed in three years and entirely gone in ten years. It would be quite unprecedented to find a stock of paper manufactured in one year still in use nineteen years later. Nine of these quartos are usually found in such a state as to show that they were issued as a single volume. The title pages of three of these plays bear date of 1600, of two of them 1608, of three of men 1619, one being undated. Mr. Greg has examined the water-marks of the Trinity College copy of these nine quartos. He found twenty-one different kinds of paper employed, two sorts being found in plays bearing the dates 1600, 1608, 1619. Mr. Greg's argument runs thus: If we accept the dates on these title pages "we shall have to assume that in 1600 Roberts had a job stock of paper containing a number of different makes, and that he used it to print editions of three plays that year, though not a duplicate edition of one of the same plays; that Jaggard, having inherited Roberts's business, and having occasion to print two plays for different publishers in 1608, happened to use for the purpose some of this same job lot of paper; that in 1619 Pavier, having somehow on his hands the remainders of these five plays, only one of which had been printed for him, commissioned Jaggard to print other plays to form with these remainders a composite volume, and that Jaggard once more happened to lay his hand on this very same stock of mixed papers."

Although a number of houses have postponed until the Fall the publication of some of the books which they had previously scheduled for this season, there is every indication that this Spring will by no means be so dull in the business of the books as some gloomy prophets have been inclined to think. Geographical limitations appear to exert a considerable influence on the popular desire for new literature—just why no one appears to be able to explain. Thus, from details gathered from various publishers by a reporter for THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS, it appears that throughout the Middle West the demand for books is quite as constant as in the days of avowed prosperity. Contrasting with this maintenance of previous standards in one, and happily the largest, section of the country, it is claimed that, temporarily at least, there was, in the beginning of the year, a decrease in the sale of books on both the Atlantic and the Pacific seaboard. Some of the publishers declare that this decrease was really due to an unwonted timidity on the part of the retail book dealers, who, taking an abnormally lachrymose view of what they called the "hard times," did not care to venture anything new. As a result a number of publishers report that they are doing considerably more business through the mails than heretofore. One publishing house, (Cassell & Co.,) giving a concrete instance of its experience in this respect, state that, wishing to bring out a subscription book at this time, it offered it to a number of retail dealers. They refused it on the ground that this was an inopportune season for books of this character. Believing that they underestimated the popular temper in this respect, it placed a single advertisement in this paper regarding the sale of its book, resulting in direct applications for the latter from over 300 correspondents from various parts of the country. Naturally it concludes from this experience, that if there has been a falling off in the sale of books this Spring, it is more apt to be the retail dealers who are at fault, through not daring to undertake new books, than through any lack of interest on the part of the public.

Prof. Ferrero of Turin University, whose book, "The Greatness and the Decline of Rome," has been a great success, has been invited by the President to be his guest at the White House in November.

THE PARLIAMENTARY GAME

Men and Manners of Great Britain's Legislature as Seen by "Toby, M. P." During Thirty-eight Years' Experience in St. Stephen's.

INTIMATE PICTURES OF FAMOUS MEN

Gladstone, Disraeli, Salisbury, Rosebery and Balfour as Parliament Saw Them.

By EDWARD CARY.

IS politics the "national game" of England? The question is suggested by the very full and graphic "Memories of Eight Parliaments," by Henry W. Lucy,* extending over the thirty-eight years from 1868 to 1906. Mr. Lucy is a journalist, who has labored assiduously in his profession in connection with various publications as correspondent, contributor, and editor, but chiefly as an observer of the two Houses of Parliament. He is most widely known as "Toby, M. P.," the author of the weekly summary of Parliamentary happenings in Punch. Though with some leaning to the Liberal side in the earlier contests of which he is the contemporary historian, he is essentially impartial, has evidently enjoyed the confidence of many of the leaders on either side, and writes with the great advantage of intimate inside knowledge of men and events.

But it is not history in the ordinary sense that he writes, nor does that sort of history seem to possess very keen interest for him. It is the game that delights him, and as a game he describes it. The issues are often of immense importance. They have affected the welfare of millions of people, and the lives of hundreds of thousands have been in the scale. During the two-score years just closed mighty changes have taken place in the constitution of the British Empire, and in its relations to the rest of the world. Practically a new empire has grown up, governed on lines largely new, while within the United Kingdom democracy, in spirit and methods and in distinct policies, has been evolved to a degree that is in realty, if not in mode, revolutionary; and this while the Conservative Party has been in power nearly two-thirds of the time. But of these issues and of the way in which they have been developed there is only indirect trace in the 400 pages of Mr. Lucy's book. What he describes, and describes vividly with varied and sustained interest, is the game in the House of Commons in which the possession of the offices seems the end, and these issues are but the fleeting conditions which shaped the tactics adopted alternately by the winners and the losers. His readers get the impression, it is true, that the game has two phases, one played in the House of Commons, one before the people; but, on the whole, the latter appears to be subordinated to the former and of importance mainly as it affects the former.

Mr. Lucy divides his volume into two parts, one devoted to "Men" and the second to "Manners." Of men he describes an even dozen, and of these five are "Prime Ministers I have known"—Gladstone, Disraeli, Lord Salisbury, Lord Rosebery, and Arthur Balfour. The men who were leaders in their way, but did not attain the first place, are Mr. Chamberlain, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. John Morley, Lord Hugh Cecil, and his eldest brother, Lord Courtney, and, last but far from least, Lord Randolph Churchill. It will be noted that there is no one here omitted who may be said to have borne a decisive part in the great game, except, perhaps, the Duke of Devonshire, formerly Lord Hartington, who, possibly, is omitted because to him the business of statesmanship was less of a game than to most of those included and his share in it marked less by the passions associated with playing it.

It would be unkind and unfair to the reader to convey the impression that Mr. Lucy's point of view, and the results of his adherence to it, make his book less interesting than the ordinary history. The contrary is emphatically true. What he sees and comments on is what is ordinarily unknown and unattainable by the historian. It is practicable to the day-by-day observer only, and, we may add, to the professional observer whose eyes are sharpened, trained, and guided by the requirements of his paper.

*MEMORIES OF EIGHT PARLIAMENTS. PART I., MEN. PART II., MANNERS. By Henry W. Lucy. (With portrait.) Pp. 414. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. London: William Heinemann. 1908. $2.50 net.

It is a common, but very serious, error to suppose that the journalist detailed to watch a political body like the House of Commons is, because he is bound to report each day, hasty or superficial in his judgments. If he is a man of character and ability he is almost forced to be the reverse. The men he meets are not only the subjects, but the sources, of his reports and comments. He is compelled to form an opinion, as nearly correct and complete as possible, of their ability, trustworthiness, predilections, motives, their strength and weakness. On the other hand, if he is to maintain a respectable position in his profession, he is bound to create confidence in himself, in his discretion and in his loyalty, and the proved possession of these qualities often opens for him access to intimate intercourse with the men, sometimes friendly and sometimes hostile, about him, and he can gain a knowledge of them extremely rare even among their acknowledged friends. Even the partisan journalist employed for a long time in a great capital, such as London or Washington, is likely to acquire a juster view of public men than that of others associating with them, for the reason that he has to be, in some degree, more independent than others. He cannot afford to make mistakes. Mr. Lucy shows no sign of being a partisan; if he is one, he conceals it; but he gives ample evidence of being a keen, vigilant, trustworthy, and zealous observer.

He is by no means cynical, but there is little of the hero worshipper in his temper. He has an unconcealed liking, as well as admiration, for an effective fighter. More than to any others, perhaps, in his long list of leaders treated, his heart seems to go out to Sir Randolph Churchill and to Mr. Chamberlain, and he shows more zest in describing their combats with their respective opponents than in tracing their achievements. In discussing Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli, he dwells more on their traits as contestants in the arena of the House than on what might seem their larger claims to fame. He delights also in the incidents which, known only to insiders and not likely to get into formal history, appear to have shaped the course of important events. For instance, there is the failure of Mr. Chamberlain to get the post of Secretary for Ireland in 1882, when Mr. Forster resigned, a post he had reason to expect, and the withholding of which he never forgave to Mr. Gladstone. But for that, Mr. Lucy thinks, the split on home rule would never have occurred and the whole history of Ireland might have been entirely different. Again, there was, in 1886, the attempt of Lord Randolph Churchill to coerce the Government by the resignation of his office as Chancellor of the Exchequer, confident they could get no one to replace him. He had "forgotten Goschen," who actually succeeded him, after which, with one or two desperate struggles, Lord Randolph passed out of political life.

Mr. Lucy is nothing if not readable. Perhaps he is most readable where he is most in earnest. He devotes a whole chapter to the humorous aspects of the life of the House of Commons, and a shorter one to "Bulls in the Westminster China Shop." They permit laughter; they hardly compel it. To most Americans the leading comic journal of England has a flavor of caterer's punch to which remnants of bottles have economically been devoted, and there is in Mr. Lucy's fun a slight suggestion of the Punch taste. Yet it is not to be doubted that the scenes he reports may have been excruciatingly funny in reality and quite worthy of the roars of laughter with which they were greeted. His descriptions of them, if not so amusing as the scenes themselves, help in giving that vivid picture of the House of Commons which his book offers. He provides, by the way, a most instructive chapter on the proceedings and methods of the House of Representatives as compared with those of the Commons.

The Parker Novels on the Stage.

One of Sir Gilbert Parker's stories has been converted into a play and will be produced in this country this Fall. "Pierre and His People" is the title of the story, but the play will be known as "Pierre of the Plains." This will be the second of Sir Gilbert Parker's novels to be presented in dramatic version on the New York stage within a year, the other being "The Right of Way." "The Weavers," this author's latest novel, is also being discussed as a possible play.

FRENCH NOVELISTS WELL ESTIMATED

Miss Stephens Writes Account of Work and Personality of Living Gallican Writers of Fiction.

MISS STEPHENS'S book* comprises critical studies of Anatole France, Maurice Barrès, Marcel Prévost, Paul Bourget, René Bazin, Edouard Rod, Pierre Loti, and the lady who signs her books "Pierre de Coulevain." Each study is prefaced by a complete bibliography of the author, prepared expressly for this volume. Avowedly the new book is intended as a guide for persons who want, seriously, to take up a course of French novels, in the pursuit of culture, and do not know where to begin. It well answers its purpose.

Miss Stephens does not give way to excessive enthusiasm, her judgments are sound, her temper is even. She believes that the novel is now "the strongest and most complete expression of the French genius" and that "no literary form in any country is so faithful a reflection of the spirit and life of the people of that country as the French novel," but she does not claim for the French novelists of the hour equality with Balzac, Flaubert, and Maupassant, and admits that only Anatole France and Barrès are worthy to be the successors of "those giants of former days."

But, while the French novel is passing through a transition stage, and while it lacks now a great guiding impulse, it still fitly represents the intellectual life of France, which, as formerly, is "a seething ferment of ideas." Anatole France advocates Socialism, Barrès nationalism, Bourget clericalism, Bazin provincialism, Prévost feminism. Moreover, the novel with a purpose has, on the whole, a greater vogue in France than in England, and even though the novelist generally starts with Flaubert's theory of "art for art's sake," he almost invariably ends by writing a novel with a purpose.

Jaques Anatole Thibault, who may be set down as Miss Stephens's hero, was born April 16, 1844, in an apartment over his father's book shop, 9 Quai Voltaire. The elder Thibault, "the French Dodsley," was an esteemed writer on subjects kindred to his admirable calling, and used the pseudonym of "France"—which his son adopted. In his youth Anatole France chose the profession of saint. "The Lives of the Saints" was his favorite book in his boyhood. Later in life he remarked that "the profession of the saint has fewer requirements and wins greater renown than that of the soldier." His droll stories of his infantile imitations of the saintly life, however, seem imaginary. His school was the College Stanislas, and the best part of his education, like Charles Lamb's, was derived from promiscuous reading. Like Dickens, he loved the streets; he walked every day, and gave his imagination play in the houses he passed, among the people he met. But he acquired good Latin and good French. His proudest boast is that he preserved his literary studies and remained a classicist.

He began his literary career as a critic, and his first book (1868) was a study of Alfred de Vigny. He edited a series of French classics, and wrote those charming essays in Le Temps which reappear in "La Vie Litteraire." He soon became a renowned critic. He published two volumes of poetry, "Les Poémes Dorès" (1873) and "Les Noces Corinthiennes," (1876,) and was appointed Librarian to the French Senate. But he was still seeking his vocation—which he found in 1881, when he published "Le Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard," a novel crowned by the French Academy. Miss Stephens says:

> It is impossible to classify Anatole France as a writer. He stands absolutely alone. He belongs to no school. He is no realist like so many of his contemporaries; neither is he an impressionist like Pierre Loti, nor a moralist like Paul Bourget. If we must put him in some pigeonhole in the present-day French fiction, we shall not go far wrong in regarding him as the pioneer of that classical reaction which is now dawning in French literature. He is the very embodiment of the artistic temperament, and a classicist not only in the fine polish and finish of his phrase, but in the spirit of his writings. One of his greatest attractions lies in the delicate irony, no less subtle than that of Rabelais and Voltaire, which permeates all his work. Indeed, with these two great masters of French prose, M. France has much in common. His style is equally forcible. His humor is essentially Gallic, and therefore is likely to offend Anglo-Saxon notions of decorum.

Of Barrès, Miss Stephens says:

> He is, indeed, with Anatole France, the most original of living French writers and a master of style. But while France has all the serenity of a classicist, Barrès is afflicted with a Gothic twist, which, in the opinion of many, obscures his style and warps his view of life and literature. Nevertheless, he is a great artist, a worshipper of "that beauty of the word, plastic and ideal, the taste of which has such a delicious savor."

The quotation, we believe is from a contemporary of Barrès, Paul Bourget. Barrès is still a young man, twenty-one years younger than Anatole France, and is a native of that No Man's Land, Lorraine, the country of Jeanne d'Arc, the great Duke of Guise, Bastien Lepage, and Bar-le-Duc jelly. Lorraine is a land of undying ideals. As a child Barrès was aware of some of the tumultuous horrors of the Franco-Prussian war. At the age of 27 he was a Boulangist. He was influential in the contest against Dreyfus. Obviously he is not of the type of solid, useful citizen. His earliest novels are in the nature of "spiritual memoirs." Miss Stephens finds them full of egoism. From pure egoism he passes in his works through collectivism to the creed of nationalism, but through them all he is a romanticist of the school of Chateaubriand.

We have found this excellent book full of sound information and impartial appraisement, and delightfully clear and sane. It is a good book and comes at a good time, when a translation of the works of Anatole France is in preparation by Mr. Lane. Hitherto readers who know French novels only in English versions, have had only "The Crime of Sylvester Bonnard," a book worth reading more than once. Comprehension of the aims and quality of French writers derived from critical and biographical works so able as this will lead to a demand for more translations. All of Miss Stephens's appreciations are graphic and to the point, and the reader will derive as much satisfaction as he gets from her chapters on France and Barrès, from her reviews of Prévost, the most surely French of all her novelists, but one who has lately been getting over his tendency to dwell on human perversity; of Mme. de Coulevain, the most cosmopolitan of the lot, and read more abroad than at home; of Paul Bourget, curiously dubbed "the apostle of arrested development"; of René Bazin, already a favorite of English readers through good translations; of Eduard Rod and Pierre Loti.

*FRENCH NOVELISTS OF TO-DAY. By Winifred Stephens. With portrait and bibliographies. New York: The John Lane Company. $1.50.

CLIMBING THE HIMALAYA.

ICE-BOUND HEIGHTS OF THE MUSTAGH. An Account of Two Seasons of Pioneer Exploration and High Climbing in the Baltistan Himalaya. By Fanny Bullock Workman and William Hunter Workman, M. A., M. D. With two maps and 170 illustrations. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. Price, $5.

A work of this nature by two such famous and experienced mountain-climbing experts must command the instant respect of all people interested in the subject. The book is not only a scientific record in narrative form, but also an invaluable guide for others who may wish to attempt the same ascents. It has the special interest of dealing with positive explorations on mighty peaks heretofore never scaled.

The accounts of the various ascents, descents, and adventures are given with little elaboration, leaving the work in the form rather of a record than a picturesque description. When, for instance, the party one time came within an ace of being destroyed outright by a tremendous avalanche of most startling proportions and force, the fact was chronicled with the importance only of a passing incident. The volume bears the stamp of the "professional" mountaineer and does not employ any glowing vocabulary for the delectation of readers who love to be thrilled as they sit by their quiet firesides.

The value of the topographical and geological facts drawn from these explorations of peaks and glaciers is self-evident, even to the uninitiated in this special lore. The strangeness of the country and the many difficulties with the coolies employed to transport baggage and instruments give a touch of fascination to the tale. However, it is a volume for the mountain climber rather than for the casual reader, who wants his books of travel served up with spice of style and adventurous exaggerations highly tinted.

TROUBLES OF A KING'S PUBLISHER

Suit Against London Times Reveals Conditions Attending Publication of Queen Victoria's Letters.

KEEN interest has been shown in London in the trial of the libel action brought by Mr. John Murray, the well-known publisher, against The London Times. It will be remembered that at the time of the publication by Mr. Murray of "The Letters of Queen Victoria," The London Times published a review of the work which, while praising it, sharply criticised the publisher for charging 3 guineas for what it declared could be produced at 10s., and that a day or two later The London Times published a letter, signed "Artifex," in which Mr. Murray, the publisher, was compared to Judas Iscariot. The libel complained of was contained in the following words:

> Mr. Murray * * * has exploited the great personality of Queen Victoria for his own ends, and coined the national interest in her doings for his own enrichment into thirty-two pieces of silver, to be precise.

Inasmuch as "The Letters of Queen Victoria" was copyrighted by the King himself, it was expected that the trial of Mr. Murray's action might be sensational. The trial did disclose many interesting particulars regarding the conditions under which the work was brought out. The contract was between the publisher, Mr. Murray, and the joint authors, Mr. A. C. Benson and Viscount Esher, who had been intrusted by the King with the duty of collecting and editing the correspondence of his royal mother. By this agreement Mr. Murray undertook the publication at his own risk and expense, and bore the entire cost of printing and publishing. The profits were to be divided, one-third going to the publisher and two-thirds to the editors. From the royalties of the American sales the editors were to receive three-fourths. The first edition of the work was to be 10,000 copies. Mr. Murray's counsel declared that the publisher's profits were actually 2s. 3d. per set of three volumes, and that about 10,000 sets had been sold, the sale having almost ceased upon the publication of The London Times's criticism of the price.

Mr. Murray on the stand told of some of the extraordinary expenses incurred for the publication. For instance, the King had desired certain pictures to be used as illustrations, and the firm had had to send to Windsor Castle to have many photographs made, from which the King selected those which appeared. The corrections in the proofs were unprecedented in volume, the cost of the corrections amounting to two or three times the cost of the original composition. Mr. Murray had been told that the proofs were to be read by distinguished persons, and therefore they must be on the best paper. He was required also to set up over 1,000 pages of matter which it was never intended to incorporate in the book, so that the distinguished gentlemen might see it.

It was developed during the trial that the criticism in The London Times's review of the price of the work was inserted in the review by the hand of Moberly Bell. It further transpired that the letter signed "Artifex" had been written in The London Times's office by Mr. Hooper, organizer of The London Times Book Club. Further, that the second letter signed "Artifex," purporting to be an apology to Mr. Murray, but in reality repeating the original charge, had been written by another employe of The London Times, a Mr. Ross. It further developed that two or three days before the publication of the book, Mr. Moberly Bell had written to Mr. Murray trying to make terms by which The London Times Book Club might be given a low price for a large number of sets.

The defense of the proprietors of The London Times is a denial that the publication complained of was a libel, the defendants holding that the letter was fair criticism, and fair comment on a matter of public interest.

LIBERAL ACCOUNT OF GOOD ENGLISH

Prof. Lounsbury Maintains that Usage Constitutes the Best Verbal Authority—Little Use for Rules.

PROF. LOUNSBURY'S entertaining book * appeals both to those who delight in specific cases illustrating principles and to those who care nothing for cases except as they tend to establish principles. It would be difficult to say by how many examples the Professor illustrates his arguments, but there is hardly a page on which there may not be found cases stated regarding such contractions as gents or pants or mob, and locutions too numerous to specify. The decision regarding the correctness of the usage is as frequently against as in favor of the pluperfect critics who are more concerned to prove themselves marvels of accuracy than the possessors of ideas whose communication is the object of language. Such tiresome persons often enough correct those saying "drownded," although they themselves say "astounded." They would blush to say "wonst," but are very likely to say "whilst," and they have not the least idea why vagrant and extravagant have unlike spellings. At least they are unlikely ever to repeat their corrections of such phrases as "to-morrow is Sunday" after reading the chapter on that sort of expression, with the reason for the right and the wrong of it made clear to all.

Probably most readers will be interested in the Professor's generalizations. Too many people think with Walter Savage Landor that good usage is something to be evolved from one's inner consciousness, or to be deduced from some process of reasoning. The whole burden of this book is that the true question is not what ought to be correct, but what is actually said and written by those qualified to be regarded as authorities. The rules of grammarians represent nothing but deductions from such usages, and make nothing correct because it is according to themselves. Authoritative usage therefore is something to be ascertained by reference to the records—that is, to books—and is not something to be argued about, or to be decided by mere exercise of even a nice and accurate taste in other matters, even matters of intellect. Mere schoolmasters and pedants are made to appear of little consequence by a writer so sure of his own better position that he is almost merciless in his reprobation of those who approach speech from the side of grammar in favor of those who approach it from the side of literature. The one party is the master of language, and the other is its slave. When Walter Scott was corrected in saying amid instead of amidst, and scarce for scarcely, he replied: "I write as I speak, to make my meaning known, and a solecism in point of composition is indifferent to me." The argument is not that Scott was right when he was wrong, but that the most careless man of genius is superior to the most careful man of talent in the very matter on which the inferior man most prides himself.

It would be a bold man who should assume to differ with the Professor on his specialty, and the newspaper writer who should do so would be ungrateful as well, considering the Professor's generous treatment of newspaper usage. But the Professor himself would be the last to complain of being cited as authority against himself. On Page 101 he states cumulatively his standard of good expression—it is usage, good usage, present good usage. He is especially impatient with those (Page 152) who "cannot be made to see that it is the meaning which living men put into the words they use that is alone of any significance; that of very trifling significance is the meaning that dead men have given to those from which the former have come." Are there, then, standards of yesterday, to-day, and tomorrow, and does the usage of a few generations ago become something more and worse than antiquated by mere lapse of time, and the incoming of another fashion of speech? What is "present" good usage, and, if that is established, what becomes of reference to past usage of whatever authority as a standard of correctness of speech today, to say nothing of hereafter? The future may be left to look out for itself, but not even Prof. Lounsbury can reconcile us to the banishment of the Bible and Shakespeare as a standard for "present good usage." We are sure that the Professor does not intend anything of the sort, and that an intention so different from his argument is a mere slip of the pen.

*THE STANDARD OF USAGE IN ENGLISH. By Thomas R. Lounsbury, Emeritus Professor of English in Yale University. Pp. 310. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

A MODERN "ELECTRA."

THE comparatively few persons who availed themselves of the opportunities of seeing the "Electra" of Hugo von Hofmannsthal on the stage will probably be glad to avail themselves of the English translation by Arthur Symons, now published and issued in a well-made volume by Brentano's.

It will be interesting to students of the drama generally. Students of Greek drama, however, will find it chiefly valuable as an example of the difference that may obtain in the treatment of the same theme. For the "Electra" of this German writer, though said to have been modeled after Sophocles, is nearer in spirit to the hedonistic Wilde than to any of the classic authors. The story is the same, of course, that inspired Sophocles, Aeschylus, Euripides, and presumably many other Greek tragedians of lesser note. It is in the psychology of the characters that the differences become at once apparent.

The fate motif is absent; so, too, the deep religious note. These are not persons swayed by an inevitable destiny or moved to catastrophic action by unseen powers over which they have no control. They are human beings, capable of asserting human will for good or evil. Electra herself thirsts for revenge, will have it at all cost, is merciless with herself as with others, but is herself the mistress of herself, except as she is moved by the human impulse to avenge a bloody deed with blood.

It is the grim old tale, told with force and power, moving naturally with only such interruption as provides the breathing space for rhetoric. This the modern poet, no less than the ancient, conceives to be his privilege when writing drama. As a play, then, for the modern theatre, it lacks the swiftly insistent action which the stage demands. But in spite of this it is still cumulatively powerful in its effect both when read and seen. And in Mr. Symons's able translation it should be studied by all who wish to keep abreast with developments in literary drama.

A BIT OF LITERARY LACE.

A delightful little fairy tale, told originally in charming verse and now done into pleasant English rhymes that may occasionally strain to make meter and sense jog on together, but on the whole a pleasant thing to read, as it was to see when acted in the theatre—this is "Les Bouffons," or "The Jesters," as we have it in the English version by John Raphael, (Brentano's.)

M. Miguel Zamacois, the author of the play, is a well-known journalist in Paris, having written for a long time for The Figaro, where his criticisms of musical events appeared over the signature of "Un Monsieur de l'Orchestra." He has the gift for turning musical verse and the romantic feeling for telling a tale of airy elegance in an inviting and graceful way. And Mr. Raphael has caught enough of his spirit to make "The Jesters" grateful reading, especially for those who cannot enjoy it in the original, or who, knowing French, must still lose much of the charm while hunting out queer tenses of queer irregular verbs.

It is a bit of the old lace of literature, archaic and euphuistic, but with the conventional threads woven into a gossamer woof of verse.

Persons who have seen Maude Adams as she played it will probably be glad to have the book, if only as a souvenir of a sensitive reproduction of its central figure. And for others it ought to have the charm of any dainty tale in verse prettily and nicely told.

For the Man Out of Work.

"How to Get a Position and How to Keep It" is the title of a book by Roland Hall which will be published this Summer by Funk & Wagnalls. The book is written with the special aim of helping the man who is out of work to get back into harness. To this end the author discusses the various qualifications necessary for the seeker after a position and gives advice as to the letters to be written and the personal applications to be made in the hunt for employment.

LIFE OF A WIFE IN FINEST TASTE

Prof. Palmer's Biography of Alice Freeman Palmer a Revelation of Delicacy and Good Judgment.

A HUSBAND who undertakes to write the biography of his dead wife has need of infinite discretion, perfect taste, and unfailing judgment—in short, a superhuman ability to draw at exactly the right place a line between the too much and the too little. On the one hand, he must not indulge in exaggerated eulogy, and on the other he must not in even the slightest degree violate the necessary confidences of the marital relation, a professional privilege, as it were, far above that of medicine and hardly (if at all) less than that of the priesthood. Mistakes in any of these directions are for him crimes sure to be punished with promptness and severity.

Fully understanding both the difficulties and the dangers of his task, Prof. G. H. Palmer presents for the public's judgment "The Life of Alice Freeman Palmer,"* sometime President of Wellesley College. He gives good reasons for doing it, and his success in avoiding the numberless pitfalls among which he had to make his way is nothing less than amazing. Rarely if ever has an unattainable ideal of combined reticence and frankness been more closely approximated. Such books usually, almost invariably, are composed of chapter after chapter of eulogy that is indiscriminating when not fulsome, and the picture drawn is accepted as accurate only by relatives and friends who are so close as to be able to imagine a reflected glory for themselves coming from what to others is merely wearisome, ridiculous, or —worse. Prof. Palmer is far from lacking appreciation for the eminence of his wife either in character or in achievement, but he also has and exercises in due measure a keen sense of proportion. If he does not portray the woman precisely as she was—that of course had been impossible—he at least shows a human being who lived and could have lived; a woman who was remarkable without ceasing to be one credible and explicable. There are no " betrayals " in the name of " truth," and there are but few and immaterial instances of overemphasis. Best of all, Prof. Palmer puts and keeps himself where he belongs in the book, neither an unimportant nor an overimportant figure.

As the author says, though Mrs. Palmer was such an effectual woman, her life was not in the common sense of the word eventful. There were in her youth the usual hardships of ambitious girls hungry for education. She worked beyond the limits of her health and strength, as most teachers do, and when the time came for her to choose between what seemed to be the continuance of her " career " and the beginning of what seemed to be a narrower life as a wife, she hesitated no more than do women of smaller mental stature. As the result proved, the career did not end, and the life as a wife was broader, not narrower, than that of the college President. What was at the time called by the unwise her " abandonment " of Wellesley when it needed most her wonderful executive ability was the culminating proof of her sanity of judgment. Prof. Palmer's justification of it on the ground that her work there was done, and that another could better carry it on, is somewhat more ingenious than convincing, and one gravely doubts if he would have thought of using the same argument in the case of a man; but the event showed that the progress and prosperity of the college did not depend on her presence, and that instinct was the true guide, reason—or what passed as such—the false one.

It is a curious fact, well brought out in the biography, that Mrs. Palmer, herself by deliberate and never regretted choice the intellectual product of co-education, in so far as any one is the product of education, never really believed in separate colleges for women except as preferable, first and vehemently, to depriving women altogether of higher training; and, second, gently, to their segregation in an annex to colleges for men. She was not afraid of men, young or old, or of their influence upon women, young or old. She was, in other words, normal, and she trusted the normal always. This to injudicious admirers made her sometimes seem a bit unprogressive, a bit old fashioned. Especially was this criticism brought upon her by her attitude toward woman suffrage, which was one friendly, but cool. She admitted rather than urged the arguments of the suffragists, and when she gave them advice, which was not often, it was to be patient, to go slowly.

Despite Mrs. Palmer's many enthusiasms, perhaps her most pronounced characteristics were tactfulness and practicality. These qualities are evidently what constituted the " executive ability " so often praised as though it were a special talent or genius. Self-sacrifice, in itself and as an end, did not appeal to her; its use as a means she illustrated all her life, and died before her time in consequence. She had, nevertheless, rather more than her full share of happiness, as happiness is distributed through the world.

BRINTON'S 'MODERN ARTISTS.'

MODERN ARTISTS. By Christian Brinton. Illustrated. Imperial 8vo. Pp. xii.-270. The Baker & Taylor Company. $6.

MR. BRINTON has essayed to reach the uncritical public in his handsome volume on modern artists, and there is every reason to suppose that he has succeeded. He has brought together a group of fourteen painters, one of them Meunier, more a sculptor than a painter, who represent the most diverse ideas and the most opposed methods. Each has produced works that either have been brought impressively before the public, as in the case of Whistler and Sargent and Watts, or else, as in the case of Wiertz and Segantini, are connected with a personality more or less vivid and eccentric. What the author writes of the people as well as of their art is extremely entertaining, and much of it is informing. It is not put in the special manner of a specialist, but there is more than a little technical weight in the criticisms, which in the main, however, are statements rather than explanations. It is amusing to think of Wiertz between the same covers with Whistler, and of Meunier as elbowing Fragonard, yet they all belong to our time, and the spirit of modernity is quite as eclectic as one pleases.

The pictures, of which there are four printed in colors, and between fifty and sixty in half tone, are admirably chosen. Most of them are unfamiliar examples of the artist's work, all of them are representative, and the larger number are beautiful and interesting and well adapted for reproduction. Not least important among them are the portraits of the painters themselves. There is a wonderful drawing of Whistler by Fantin Latour, and there are Lavery's handsome portrait of himself with his daughter that is in the Luxembourg, Von Lenbach's portrait of himself with his daughter Marion, Liebermann's vigorous drawing of Meunier, and Arnold Boecklin's gruesome representation of himself arrested in his work by a whisper from the grinning death behind him.

Sargent's brisk and competent version of his own features is included with Segantini's poetic self portrait. Watts and Wiertz and Fragonard also painted their own portraits, and these are reproduced, Fragonard's having a downright sincerity of handling and an almost prosaic simplicity of effect curiously at variance with the fanciful gayety of his art. The frontispiece is Whistler's superb Rosa Corder, reproduced in color.

UNMYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE.

A WALKING GENTLEMAN. By James Prior, author of " Forest Folk," " Ripple and Flood," " Hyssop," &c. 12mo. Pp. 379. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

If the gentleman in question were one for whom we could feel a particle of sympathy it would be an undeniable pleasure to follow him on his walking trip about rural England. In all the other instances in our reading experience of people's disappearing on their wedding day there have been mysteries. Either a murder has had to be hidden or a long-lost husband has turned up and made excitement enough to last through three or four hundred pages. " A Walking Gentleman " is an exception. On the day preceding that appointed for his marriage to Lady Sarah Sallis, Lord Beiley was unutterably bored, so he walked away and didn't come back—that is, until the last chapter. That his vices were as inconspicuous as his virtues is about as much of a description as could be given of Lord Beiley without repeating. He was of a negative personality. His experiences were many and diverse; too many for an ordinary sized book, and too diverse for verisimilitude.

LIVELY HISTORY BY EMIL REICH

The Hungarian Writes to Startle, and He Succeeds—Nevertheless His Conclusions Are Worth Considering.

WHILE Dr. Emil Reich doubtless expects and intends to be taken as a serious historian, his way of presenting his claims to the title is characterized by so much of Hungarian vivacity and audacity that his work is viewed askance by his graver rivals and their disciples, many of whom, alas! seem to think that history ought to be dull and its reading a difficult and solemn task. Now, whatever may be Dr. Reich's faults, he is not dull, and, though his accuracy in explaining the course of human events has often been questioned and hardly less often denied, he certainly does look at things with eyes that take in a good many of them at the same time. Even though some of his theories and conclusions have been successfully attacked, that is a fate not unrecorded as befalling the theories and conclusions of historians desperately free from the sin of interesting and exciting their readers. Even in his most reckless moments, when his effort, as sometimes happens, seems obviously and wholly to be to startle or shock, the antagonism he evokes usually makes for intellectual activity and therefore for edification in the end.

All of Dr. Reich's qualities, good and bad, are well illustrated in his "Foundations of Modern Europe,"* comprising twelve lectures on subjects eminently adapted to provide him with opportunities for controverting accepted notions and traditions. Which is, perhaps, what he enjoys most. After a preface wherein he genially asserts that the historian of a living nation is sure to go astray unless, in addition to knowing its language, he has for years earned his bread among its people—Dr. Reich has himself done this in many lands—he first takes up "The War of the American Revolution." Without a tremor of hesitation he declares that the causes and the incidents of that conflict were quite different from their presentation by either the English or the American authorities. The British were neither stupid nor oppressive, and we did not revolt against taxation without representation. The colonials acted on a vague consciousness that an enormous and enormously valuable hinterland determined their destiny, but they lacked the strength, the devotion and the intelligence requisite for winning their independence, and France won it for them off Cape Henry, not because she loved America or liberty, but because she hated Great Britain and wanted to hurt her.

Here, it will be observed, is a combination of new and old ideas, prettily arranged to give the maximum amount of pain to the greatest number. Yet it is true that most of our accepted Revolutionary history is mere folklore and legend, and it is well to have the fact emphasized in exactly the way Dr. Reich does it, even though the way isn't the best that could be imagined.

Two of the lectures are devoted to the French Revolution and four to Napoleon. The former, with characteristic moderation, Dr. Reich declares the greatest event, and the latter the greatest man, in history, and his admiration for both is almost without limit. The conventional horror of cutting off heads and of killing men by the hundred thousands is of course not his. He fixes all his attention on results, and they have not often been more clearly or eloquently stated. Again and again Dr. Reich contrasts peace and war to what he considers the not infrequent advantage of war. What he really hates is "peace at any price," but he is a little harsh in his condemnation of the "monks and millionaires" whom he presents as advocating it. His admirable chapter on "The Reaction" that followed the downfall of Napoleon contains much evidence that there are misfortunes due to other causes than a disinclination for slaughter and that the "monks and millionaires" are not responsible for quite all of humanity's troubles.

Dr. Reich credits the unity of Italy, as he does the independence of the United States, to France, but he kindly admits that Germany attained nationality without any help from anybody. Even in the case of Germany, however, it is only Bismark whom he sees as potent and constructive. The famous manipulation of the Kaiser's note to Benedetti is lauded as a necessary expedient, worthy of the man who in his wisdom had refused to humiliate Austria beyond measure.

In a striking "epilogue" Dr. Reich startles his readers by declaring that the time for international wars in Europe is past. This prophecy of peace he rests on the fact that each Continental nation at last has a well compacted territory, with none of the "enclaves" which started so many deadly quarrels in other days. Even Austria-Hungary he considers a permanency.

*FOUNDATIONS OF MODERN EUROPE. Twelve Lectures Delivered in the University of London. By Emil Reich, Doctor Juris. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

In the White House with President Roosevelt.

In the Sunday TIMES for the 26th of last month there was published an account of how President Roosevelt transacts the great affairs of government from day to day, giving a close personal view of the executive head of the Nation at his work. This account was the result of a week's stay in the White House by the author, and in its portrayal of character and incident formed an altogether unique contribution not only to the study of Mr. Roosevelt the man, but to a popular understanding of the vital interests and occupations which engross the attention of the President of the United States as well. In the history of the country no author has ever before been accorded a similar opportunity to describe from observation derived at first hand the stirring events and curious sidelights that come into the purview of the daily routine of the nation's executive business. The interest in this article was so great as to render inevitable its publication in permanent and expanded form. The volume will be issued by G. P. Putnam's Sons next Saturday under the title, "A Week in the White House with Theodore Roosevelt." It will be well furnished with illustrations bearing out the scenes described in the text.

A HEROIC FISHERMAN.

BIG GAME AT SEA. By Charles Frederick Holder, author of "The Log of a Sea Angler," "Life of Charles Darwin," &c. With many illustrations. 8vo. Pp. 352. New York: The Outing Publishing Company. $2 net.

FISHING as a sport is commonly classed as one of the gentler branches, a diversion pursued by gentlemen of much leisure and little taste for excitement more intense than the sudden drawing taut of the line and the quiver of a light pole as a few ounces of trout leap clear of the water and become impaled on a fly-concealed barb. In "Big Game at Sea," Mr. Charles Frederick Holder, a fisherman of prowess and a writer of ability, tells of angling on a large scale, sport which, from the hunter's point of view, is worthy of the name. How, with rod and line, he landed a sea-bat, or devil fish, weighing more than a ton and measuring seventeen feet from tip to tail, is the subject of the first chapter, and it is more exciting than the story of a lion hunt. Intimate knowledge of sharks, octopi, black sea bass, tarpon, swordfish, leaping tuna, and other game fish gives material for succeeding chapters. One is headed "The Biography of a Man Eater," and deals with the everyday life of a shark. It is such a story as Ernest Thompson Seton might have written, and though not in line with the rest of the book, an appropriate complement to it.

Diving for turtles is a pastime which the author seems to enjoy. As has been remarked before, de gustibus non disputandum est, but it is safe to predict that riding on the back of a turtle weighing several hundred pounds, under water and on the surface, will never become a popular form of amusement. Mr. Holder seems to regret the inability to hold his breath a sufficient length of time to make this submarine sport really worth while. "Big Game at Sea" is a remarkable book, and should take a high place among the literature of this and kindred subjects. It is illustrated with reproductions of photographs.

Some Comments on Vol. I.

"Lucidity and conciseness of statement are conspicuously linked in this book with exact knowledge, the sense of proportion, and critical insight. Altogether, the Cambridge History of English Literature has made an excellent beginning, and promises in its completed form to be one of the most valuable works of reference in the language."—Standard.

"The first volume furnishes the most satisfactory history of English letters from the beginning, up to but not including Chaucer, that we have."—The Independent.

AUTHORS AND EDITORS.

We cannot believe that the experience with his publisher narrated by "John Smith" in his communication in another column represents the common attitude of the best publishing houses toward the manuscripts which they turn into type. That "Mr. Smith's" account of the treatment accorded his "copy" is an authentic story, we have reason to know; that the changes made were uncalled for and in many cases quite absurd; that, in fine, the whole performance was gratuitous, officious, and injurious, we are certain, and that the offending publishers rank among the largest and most respectable houses in America we also know.

Nevertheless we prefer to believe that "Mr. Smith" was the victim of a copy-reader who would find it possible to hold his job in very few publishing houses, and whose idea of his duties is probably not understood by his present employers.

Most writers could report, we are sure, treatment in this respect at the hands of their publishers, for which they are grateful rather than indignant. Errors, lapses of tastes, ambiguities, and even absurdities, escape the pens of the best writers, and are overlooked in their own revisions. The competent editor is a valuable friend; few are the authors who have not to thank him for salvation from many a fault. The officious and incompetent editor is, of course, a malignant and detestable member of society—no vituperation can do him injustice.

But he is rare—of the contrary Mr. "Smith's" dolorous tale does not convince us. That any "old and famous publishing house" ever polished up a manuscript before printing it and then sent the author a bill for the work is, frankly, not credible—though "Mr. Smith," smarting under his own woes, is ready to believe it.

There is always, it might be said, the possibility of a clash between author and editor over refined particulars of style. A wise author will profit by his editor's suggestions—and persist in maintaining his own manner in so far as this is not in violation of manifest good usage or good taste. In the matter of pointing he cannot ask his own way; punctuation is rather a matter of house usage than either of rule or individual style. A publisher may properly contend that his publications must conform to one standard in punctuation—and in spelling. In England they point much more closely and spell in a more extended form than we do in America. An American publishing house with an English branch may reasonably desire to maintain a house style less distantly removed from English usage than it might otherwise admit. The essentials of his writing the author is undoubtedly entitled to control. In most cases the publisher's suggestions are comparatively few, and probably tend to the improvement of the manuscript.

There have been, however, more instances than the public suspects in which manuscripts originally quite impossible have been rewritten by editors, and which thus reconstructed have made fame and fortune for the authors. An illustrious example of the benefit conferred by critical, but judicious and sympathetic editing, might be cited in the case of one of America's most famous (and best) writers of short stories, in whose early manuscripts only editorial genius could have detected any trace of the genius of authorship.

CHARMING ROMANCE.

MY LOST DUCHESS. An Idyl of the Town. By Jesse Lynch Williams. With illustrations by Wallace Morgan. New York: The Century Company. Price, $1.50.

It is seldom, indeed, in these days, that one has the pleasure of reading such a charming romance as this little one. It is still more seldom that one finds this atmosphere brought to town, so as to flourish in the very heart of the city. Surely more books of the same kind should follow; tales rich and tender with what might be called the clarified love interest, unsullied and full of admiration for the decent things of life; the dream realizations which some of us are still old-fashioned enough to search for in the glare of modern existence.

In "My Lost Duchess" Mr. Williams has shown himself to be just enough of an idealist to refine the events of daily life without becoming unconvincing. The disgruntled skeptic may cast the volume aside with the remark that it is "pretty," meant to be disparaging; but even that is more than could ever be said of the skeptic's profound and worldly reflections. As a matter of fact, the story is far more than "pretty"; it is absolutely delightful and thoroughly interesting into the bargain. Read it, and then perhaps your eyes will also be opened so you can find a lost duchess in the fog when you wander by the reservoir in Central Park.

The Way to Go Fishing.

Those who expect to go fishing this Summer need not hark back to Izaak Walton for advice as to how to become complete anglers. Fishermen, if they are at all worthy of the name, are patient souls, and if they wait until next month will possibly find their literary and piscatorial curiosity satisfied by Louis Rhead's "The Book of Fish and Fishing," which Charles Scribner's Sons expect to publish at that time. The author has written previous books that deal with special fishes, but this book, we are told, is the fruit of his long experience with all kinds of fish and fishing, "boiled down and logically arranged." Moreover, the size of the book is to be such as to permit of its being easily carried in the coat pocket. It is particularly designed for the use and information of salt-water anglers. There are maps showing the distribution of the various fish, and charts showing at a glance how, when, and where to fish, with a complete list of places in the United States and Canada. Then the United States Bureau of Fisheries has given the first privilege to reproduce in this book forty-eight of its splendid fish drawings, which represent most accurately all the characteristics of each species mentioned. Such features would turn old Izaak Walton green with envy—if he could but see the book.

DRIFT OF LONDON LITERARY GOSSIP

Novel by "Elizabeth Pomerania" to be Dramatized—Satire by Kenneth Grahame—Life of "C. B."

LONDON, May 8.—That mysterious literary personality, "The Author of 'Elizabeth and Her German Garden,'" has at last consented to call herself by a pseudonym somewhat less unwieldy. Of course, it is by this time pretty generally understood that the lady is no other than the Countess von Arnim, but officially she still maintains very closely the secret of her identity.

Now, however, that she has dramatized her charming novel, "The Princess Priscilla's Fortnight," arrangements for the production of which are at present being made, it has become obvious that the author must choose for herself a name which runs into something less than eight words. "By the Author of 'Elizabeth and Her German Garden'" would certainly be an absurdly large mouthful on a theatre programme or on a sheet poster. Her name will therefore be given as "Elizabeth Pomerania." This choice of pseudonym will to those who are familiar with the secret of the author's identity seem very appropriate.

Besides dramatizing her "The Princess Priscilla's Fortnight" "Elizabeth Pomerania" has been working at a new novel, which is said to be nearly completed. She has been at work on it for a year, but has not yet definitely decided by what name to call it. It will probably be published in London by the Messrs. Smith Elder, and in the United States by the Messrs. Scribner.

Ever since Mr. Kenneth Grahame wrote "The Golden Age" and "Dream Days," some ten or fifteen years ago, his admirers have been hoping that he would write more books of the same kind, but so far their hopes have been disappointed. I am now informed, however, that Mr. Grahame has almost finished writing a book, which, though it is of a different character from "Dream Days" and "The Golden Age," shares their charm.

This book is ostensibly the story of "Mr. Toad" and "Mr. Water Rat." It is not, I am told, an animal story, however, but a social satire. All this sounds rather mysterious and piques the curiosity. It is probable that the book will appear here and in America in the Autumn.

It is announced a popular biography of the late Prime Minister, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, is to be published immediately by the Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton. The author is Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M. P.

A friend of Eden Phillpotts tells me that the title of Mr. Phillpotts's next book will be "A Thief of Virtue." Only half of it has been written as yet. It will be a serious novel, with the customary Dartmoor setting and with a strong and unusual plot.

"A Thief of Virtue" will, I am informed, be brought out by Mr. John Murray, who will hereafter publish all Mr. Phillpotts's books. Before finishing this novel, however, Mr. Phillpotts will make a trip to Italy. The book will be completed on his return.

"Rita's" lawsuit, by which that lady secured 100 guineas damages from the publishers of a paper called "The Red Letter," has been conspicuously the most entertaining episode which has occurred in London's sedate literary circles for a long time.

"Rita's" (Mrs. W. Desmond Humphreys) ground of complaint against "The Red Letter" was that its editor had recently published serially a novel of hers written and issued some fifteen years ago under the heading of "A Thrilling New Serial by 'Rita.'" Moreover, so many changes had been made in the story that "Rita" herself was at first unable to recognize it as her own work. "Rita" claimed damages, therefore, because she had been defamed before the public by the suggestion that she could be a party to the fraud of passing off an old novel as a new one, and also for the harm that had been done her reputation by the extensive changes made in her book.

Among the witnesses called either in support of "Rita" or in support of "The Red Letter" were several prominent authors. Messrs. Anthony Hope, Egerton Castle, Barry Pain, and Jerome K. Jerome all spoke on behalf of "Rita." Mr. Jerome, indeed, indulged in a little spat with the leading counsel for the defense.

The lawyer invited Mr. Jerome to point out any single change or omission in "Rita's" book which had "destroyed the author's reputation."

To this Mr. Jerome replied sarcastically: "You might say if you cut off a man's nose you don't damage his face, but you spoil his general appearance."

After a short interchange of remarks the counsel suggested to Mr. Jerome that he "might have answered the question more politely." Taken all in all, the proceedings were most enlivening.

They were interesting also because of the revelations they made as to the changes in their work to which even distinguished authors have to submit at the hands of editors who publish their works serially. For example, one editor acknowledged to having cut down stories written by Robert Louis Stevenson and to having altered the titles. Another striking bit of testimony was from a journalist who said he had "cut hundreds of stories ruthlessly." He was particularly hard on profanity in manuscripts.

"One of the most popular authors in England," this journalist continued, "complained to me that he had had 300 'damns' taken out by a certain English publisher."

The conclusion of the suit was, as has been said, that "Rita" secured damages from the publishers. "Rita" has, by the way, written over fifty novels in twenty-five years. GALBRAITH.

GOSSIP OF AUTHORS.

MRS. DELAND is planning to leave Boston soon for her Summer home, in Kennebunkport, Me.

Holman Day, the author of "King Spruce," has the title of Major and is generally referred to as Major Day. He obtained his rank several years ago as Military Secretary to Gov. Hill of Maine.

Next week Rex Beach will leave New York for another visit to Alaska. With him will go Paul Armstrong, the playwright; Fred Stone of Montgomery & Stone of "The Red Mill," and another companion from Chicago. The four plan to spend the next two months hunting and fishing in Alaska under the guidance of Rex Beach.

Myrtle Reed (Mrs. J. S. McCullough) has just finished a manuscript which will be published early this coming Autumn by G. P. Putnam's Sons. The manuscript is a romance bearing the title "Flower of the Dusk."

Mr. Philip S. Marden, whose previous journeys resulted last Fall in his book entitled "Greece and the Aegean Islands," is now making an extended trip through Spain.

Miss Sarah Orne Jewett, author of "The Tory Lover," "Deephaven," &c., has been elected a Trustee for the Maine Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick, author of "The Beryl Stone" and "The Kinsman," has turned to a very different field in her latest book, "Home Life in Germany," which the Macmillans will publish this Spring. Although of English birth, Mrs. Sidgwick's parents were German, and she knows both countries equally well.

Not long ago a letter reached Marshall P. Wilder from a little town in Texas addressed simply with his half-tone portrait pasted on the envelope. Inside was the following note: "I've made a wager that you get this. Do I win?"

Havelock Ellis, author of "The Soul of Spain," just published, has made frequent trips to Spain during the last twenty years. He is general editor of the Contemporary Science series, in which appeared his "Man and Woman" and "The Criminal." He also edited the Mermaid series of Old Dramatists.

Edwin Markham, who has been seriously ill most of the Winter, has now recovered and resumed work on his books, "The Poetry of Jesus" and "Virgilia and Other Poems," which will be published in the Fall by the McClure Company.

Forthcoming Fiction from the Davis Brothers.

Two weeks from now Charles Scribner's Sons will publish a volume of ten short stories by Charles Belmont Davis entitled "The Stage Door." All of these stories deal more or less with the stage or with the people of the stage, although some of the plots have to do with characters and situations that are anything but theatrical. Then, next month Richard Harding Davis's new novel will be published in book form with the title "Vera, the Medium." It is not often that Spiritualism has figured prominently in a work of fiction.

SEVEN YEARS' WAR NEWLY STUDIED

Corbett's History of England's Part n Contest Which Opened the Way for American Independence.

By GEORGE LOUIS BEER, M. A.,

Author of "Commercial Policy of England Toward the American Colonies," "British Colonial Policy, 1754-1765."

THE attention paid historical investigation is a marked characteristic of modern literary and scientific activity. Even more striking than the number of historical works published is their lack of originality in respect both to the facts presented and the viewpoint from which they are written. As a rule, these books borrow from their predecessors time-honored "facts," which are none the less often false, and judgments based upon inherited chauvinistic prepossessions rather than upon a critical and objective valuation of the available data. To one gifted with a facile pen and content with average results historiography presents but slight difficulties. But the Muse of History is a severe taskmaster for the conscientious scholar, and demands that he devote infinite pains to the collection and co-ordination of his facts, until finally they should become so integral a part of his mental life that if transplanted into the specific period studied his fulness of knowledge and mastery of detail would astound even the best informed of those directing the course of events.

It is to the latter class of historians, to the select few of Clio's numerous band, that Mr. Corbett belongs. His previous works on the beginnings of England's maritime strength in the age of Drake and his successors have already gained for him a substantial reputation. In the eyes of some this was dimmed by the narrow viewpoint of his subsequent study of the development of England's power in the Mediterranean, but the present work cannot fail to assure him an enviable position among historical scholars.

The title of this book, "England in the Seven Years' War,"* is not perfectly felicitous, being both too broad and too narrow, but the sub-title, "A Study in Combined Strategy," accurately defines its limitations.

Mr. Corbett is lecturer in history at the Royal Naval War College, and as such naturally is mainly interested in those subjects that are most profitable to the student of the art of war, especially that branch waged upon water. But his work is not a mere exposition of the doctrine of the influence of sea power, which was a commonplace and everyday working theory of the statesmen of the eighteenth century, and whose forgotten significance Capt. Mahan merely resuscitated. Corbett treats his subject from a broader, but also from a more technical, standpoint. He is mainly intent upon studying what he calls "the function of the fleet in war," as illustrated by the complex strategy of Great Britain's most successful war. This necessitates a careful examination not only of naval affairs, but also of "the dominant factors by which the functions of a fleet are determined." Consequently he studies in their manifold interrelations the whole area of naval, military, and diplomatic activities in that world-wide struggle, upon whose outcome hinged the future history of Europe, Asia, and America. Not only are the naval and military operations in the East and West described, but also the diplomatic history of these momentous years. And in this connection it should be mentioned that Corbett's account of the intricate negotiations leading up to the Peace of Paris of 1763 is a distinct contribution to our knowledge, and largely supersedes even so recent and thorough an analysis as that given by Ruville in his comprehensive life of Chatham.

In order to acquire the necessary information Corbett gained a thorough mastery of the voluminous manuscript material, especially the Newcastle papers in the British Museum, and the Admiralty dispatches in the Public Record Office. He not only has the equipment that Chatham would have demanded from his private secretary, but also a mass of knowledge that was necessarily hidden from those directing affairs. But at the same time Corbett has the advantage of not being biased by the partisanship necessarily produced by such actual participation in the events which he chronicles and analyzes. As a result of this firm grasp of the facts he writes with a fulness of knowledge, and makes clear the strategy of the stupendous conflict. Furthermore, he is thereby enabled to understand the nations actuating the protagonists of the drama, and the difficulties with which they had to contend are as vivid to him as they were to them. He criticises men from the standpoint of what was then practically attainable with the available means, not in accordance with an ideal standard created by a self-satisfied posterity. It is not surprising to find that there are few harsh judgments of persons. Men like Newcastle and Loudoun, at whose expense historians have been prone to write strong invectives, receive their due share of praise as well as of blame.

Apart from their own participation therein, this war is of supreme interest to Americans, because the conquest of Canada freed the Continental Colonies from the ever-present menace of French aggression, which was the chief bond attaching them to Great Britain, and made possible a movement for political independence. A perusal of these volumes will serve to correct the extremely narrow attitude adopted by many American historians toward this contest. Writers who call it by its correct name, as does Corbett, have even been criticised for not employing the provincial designation of the "French and Indian war." This obscures its broad scope, and tends arbitrarily to cut off American development from the broader sweep of historical evolution of which it formed an inseparable part.

The military operations of the years 1755 to 1758, within the area of what is now the United States, which figure prominently in most of our histories, are barely mentioned by Mr. Corbett. Naturally the Louisburg, Quebec, and Montreal campaigns are described in detail, but much of the matter contained in the pages of Parkman's attractive "Montcalm and Wolfe" is conspicuous by its absence. In this arrangement Mr. Corbett may to some extent have violated the canons of due proportion, but in the main his judgment is correct, as the ultimate issue of the contest was determined by other operations.

Being the product of fallible man, a book cannot be perfect, and that of Mr. Corbett is necessarily no exception to this invariable rule. Here and there inaccuracies have been noticed, which are all the more glaring on account of the general predominance of the opposite characteristic. As a rule these are due to incomplete acquaintance with colonial history, which is apparently the weak link in Mr. Corbett's equipment. Furthermore some of the available manuscript material has been neglected, and in addition the investigations of some of his predecessors have been ignored. Conspicuous among the former is the failure to use a series of invaluable documents on the capture of Havana preserved in the Public Record Office in the series entitled Colonial Correspondence; similarly, among the latter omissions, is the neglect of Alfred Bourguet's valuable documentary study of the policy of Choiseul. It might also be mentioned, even though it tends toward a violation of one of the fundamental maxims of criticism, in so far as it partially condemns a book for not being something that its author never intended it to be, that like other military historians Corbett seemingly fails to realize that military and naval strength are not ends in themselves, and that success in warfare depends upon fundamental economic factors, which predetermine the issue of armed conflicts and the fate of nations.

Within its self-imposed limitations, however, the book in its entirety is entitled to the highest praise. It is a distinct contribution to our knowledge, and is doubly welcome because of the attractive form wherein it is conveyed. While perhaps occasionally unduly rhetorical, Mr. Corbett's style is in general forcible, and above all clear. In addition, by the judicious employment of the device of repetition, used so successfully by Spencer among philosophers and by Seeley among historians, he has smoothed the reader's path, and has lessened the fatigue always necessitated by the approach to an understanding of a serious subject. G. L. B.

*ENGLAND IN THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR. A Study in Combined Strategy. By Julian S. Corbett, LL. M. In two volumes. Vol. I., Pp. xii-476. Vol. II., Pp. vii-407. London: Longmans, Green & Co. $6.

VENETIAN HISTORY IN BRIEF STUDIES

Horatio Brown Republishes Essays Covering Many Aspects of Life in City of the Adriatic.

By Dr. JOSEPH JACOBS.

MR. HORATIO F. BROWN has long been known as a specialist student of Venetian history, and some twenty years ago he published a number of studies on the subject, which have gone out of print, and which he now expands into these two volumes,* which may be cordially recommended to the many persons interested in the romantic history of the City of the Isles. The studies go over almost all aspects of Venetian history except the artistic ones, and we all know how multifarious are the points in which Venice touches the history of civilization. Commerce, the Church, theology, and humanism, printing and the drama have all their points of connection with the Rialto, and Mr. Brown's sketches deal with them just in those phases which are the more interesting and dramatic. Excellently written, they form admirable reading as well as instructive information.

Mr. Brown arranges his studies in chronological order, so that in a measure a fair idea of the development of the Venetian State, from its earliest beginnings down to the middle of the seventeenth century, when it practically had lost its importance and significance, can be otained from his luminous pages. Of the two conspiracies against the State, those of Tiepolo and Marino Faliero, he gives accounts based upon late investigations. The latter study clears up much that was misleading in the account presented by Lord Byron in his vigorous drama upon the subject. Of the chief Venetian families, Mr. Brown selects the Carraresi as a typical example, though of course they do not rise to the heights of the Dandoli. One of the most elaborate of the essays deals with the condottiere Carmagnola. Owing to its island position, Venice was not so closely connected with the careers of the soldiers of fortune as the other North Italian Republics, but it had intimate connection with the mainland and had to use the services of the professional soldier nearly as much as the other republics.

One of the characteristics of Italian life which has always attracted morbid attention was the use of the dagger and poison to remove political opponents. Mr. Brown has a most interesting discussion of the underlying principles which justified this use in the eyes of the rulers of Venice, as of other Italian cities. Politics was in a large measure civil war. War is a reversion to the state of nature, and all weapons were thus justified in the eyes of the unscrupulous. There can be no doubt that the Council of Ten felt no compunction in accepting the many offers to remove their political opponents by surreptitious means, and Mr. Brown gives a very curious example of the scale of prices which Brother John of Ragusa placed upon his services if he were successful of Gabriele Gioliti, who is distinguished in removing the Grand Turk or the King of Spain, or even His Holiness the Pope. He required in the first place a pension of 1,500 ducats per annum, and then, if he succeeded in removing the Grand Turk, 500 ducats; the King of Spain 150 ducats, (exclusive of traveling expenses,) and for His Holiness an additional 100 ducats. Recipes for poison are also included in this remarkable essay. The career of Caterina Cornaro, who was nominally Queen of Cypress, reminds one of the intimate relations between Venice and that island.

Mr. Brown is especially illuminating upon the commercial and fiscal policy of the republic. Venice owed her position to her commercial relations with Constantinople, which led to more elaborate and intimate diplomatic relations between Venice and the Sublime Porte during the sixteenth century, on which Mr. Brown again gives a full and instructive essay.

Two of the studies deal with Venice as the home of printing. Leaving out of account the Aldi and the better-known printers, Mr. Brown directs his attention to the career and publications as one of the earliest publishers of anthologies, now so favorite a form of making up books without having to pay authors. The relation of the censorship to the Venetian press forms another subject dealt with in these volumes, in which Mr. Brown has something to add to Mr. Putnam's elaborate work on the subject.

Of the remaining essays, that on Sarpi, historian of the Council of Trent, is most elaborate, but most people's interest will be aroused chiefly by the short paper on Shakespeare in Venice, which brings together all the passages of "The Merchant of Venice" and "Othello" which have local interest. Mr. Brown, like most of the Shakespearean pundits, doubts whether Shakespeare was ever in Venice, but is inclined to believe that he must have been acquainted with some one who had been there, owing to the minuteness and accuracy of details of local buildings and customs shown by the great dramatist.

Altogether, as will be seen, these volumes offer a very varied fare to the reader who has been attracted by the glamour of the Venetian name. Most aspects of Venetian life are touched upon, and incidentally most of the great events which modified the course of the republic's history are dealt with, so that in a measure these admirable volumes might well take the place of a more formal history of Venice.

LIVELY CHAMBERS YARN.

SOME LADIES IN HASTE. By Robert W. Chambers. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

"SOME LADIES IN HASTE" is a vastly amusing bit of whimsicality, of the recognized Chambers variety, founded on an absurdity and yet introducing many fascinating and altogether laughable romantic incidents. It is not a novel; neither is it precisely a collection of short stories. Though the romantic tales are really separate and distinct, in that they may be read singly with appreciation, they are yet bound together by the personality of one male individual, the "mischief-maker," whose own astounding romance concludes the series.

To write love stories of such eccentric nature, with the men as well as the ladies very much "in haste," it was necessary to have an explanation—not truly an explanation, but what might, in dramatic phrase, be termed an induction. This is found in the hypnotic experiments of one William Manners, who has visited a hypnotic healer to cure his habit of excessive smoking, and who, having discovered that he could also exert mental influence, has determined to make over the characters of various club friends and especially to endow the prosaic ones with romantic instincts. The difficulty is that he does not know how to reverse the treatment.

Manners exerts his mystic force on five men, all of whom he knows, and on five young women whom he sees passing by his club window on Fifth Avenue. He inspires one of his male victims, a business man, with a sudden desire to go into the country to collect beetles and butterflies; another light-headed chap is hypnotized into becoming especially brilliant and earnest; a snob is mesmerized into such a state of super-democratic feeling that he has a ridiculous desire to marry his cook at all hazards, and a man who owns a big agency for bill posting is seized with a desire to paint real pictures. These four men all have hasty love affairs with four of the girls, who have also been treated.

When the time for the final episode comes only two victims are left. Manners then concludes that the waves of strenuosity which he has directed against Billy West have gone astray, and, to his horror, reaches a conviction that they must have hit no less a person than the Nation's Chief Executive. There is still one girl to be accounted for—a girl to whom he has suggested a love of country life and marriage to a farmer. Manners himself, whose experiments have cost his fortune, and who is now rusticating in the country, turns out to be farmer enough to meet the requirements.

THE CORPORATION MANUAL.

THE CORPORATION MANUAL. And Cyclopedia of Corporation Forms and Precedents. Edited by John S. Parker. 15th Edition, 1907-08. New York: Corporation Manual Company. 1816 pp. $6.50.

The Corporation Manual appears promptly, and promptness is of the essence of its value to those who use it. Especially is this true this year, since never before has there been such fermentation in the body of law regarding corporations in general, and those in the nature of trusts particularly. With nearly fifty legislatures at work, and some of them working overtime, the busy lawyer is sure to be behind in his law and to be impeded in his efforts to bring himself up to date except for the services of such a work as this, which has as its object the gathering of the statutes of all the States upon this topic.

This year not only have they been gathered as usual, but the work has been rearranged so as to conform with the leading digests. This year for the first time the text of many statutes is given, together with notes and cases. Obviously it is not possible to give the full text for every State. The method adopted is to quote textually under the appropriate heading of the general classification. This not only simplifies the use of the book—it also brings together the various statutes comparatively. To give an idea of the scope of the book, it may be said that fifty pages are devoted to New York alone. The compilation is not confined to the States and Territories; Canada, the Philippines, and Hawaii are also included. And forms are given suitable for the practice in each case.

NOVEL OF CALIFORNIA LIFE.

Mrs. Mary Austin, whose novel, "Isidro," published two or three years ago, and little volumes of descriptive essays have shown her to be possessed both of something to say and an admirable faculty of saying it, comes before the public with another California novel, "Santa Lucia," (Harper & Brothers, $1.50.) In it she abandons the field of romance and the colorful days of Spanish rule in California with which she won success, and writes instead a tale of the everyday life of unremarkable people in the California of perhaps a dozen years ago. The subtitle calls it "a common story," and she seems to have endeavored to put into it some of the quiet tragedy of unfulfilled hopes and longings which is the common lot of mortals and something of the healing which ordinary life brings to such wounds. The scene is laid in a college town in a lovely valley, both bearing the name of Santa Lucia. Californians will recognize it as a faithful picture of the famous Santa Clara Valley, wherein lies the town of San José. The characters are nearly all connected with the college, and Mrs. Austin must be credited with distinct success in her creation of the social atmosphere of such an environment. There is delightful art, too, in the depiction of some of her characters, both men and women, and her descriptions of nature are exquisitely beautiful. But one grieves to note a falling off in that distinction of style which has marked her previous work.

VEDIC RELIGION.

THE RELIGION OF THE VEDA. The Ancient Religion of India, (from Rig-Veda to Upanishads.) A series of six lectures by Maurice Bloomfield, Ph. D., LL. D., Professor of Sanskrit and Comparative Philology in Johns Hopkins University. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. Price $1.50.

THESE lectures are the seventh series in the "American Lectures on the History of Religions," and were delivered by Prof. Bloomfield before various learned institutions of America during the Fall and Winter of 1906-7. Though they deal with a subject which is in itself recondite, treating of ideas and writings, the mere dates of which cannot be definitely fixed within the range of several centuries—the idea of the lecturer, who is an eminent authority in the field, has been to make the subject comprehensible to any man with some understanding of the general philosophic aspects, even though he be not expert in the details of Indian religious lore.

Owing to the vast time and literature embraced in the term "Vedic," the treatment has been selective; casting aside many particulars of mythology and ritual but laying special stress on the development of religious thought apart from myths and ceremonials.

Unlike many scholarly discussions, these lectures have a personal charm, for the author, despite the fact that he has devoted a lifetime to research, has not lost his common sense, his humanity, or his sense of humor. His quotations and his comments on them are always delightful.

Though it may require a very careful reading, or even several readings, for the layman to appreciate the details of the growth of religious ideas as explained in these lectures, yet the main principles are so stated and so emphasized in different correlations that they must inevitably be grasped. The relation of the early gods to the forces of nature is self-apparent; the growth of the caste feeling and the ritualistic tendencies and the devices of the priests to obtain liberal offerings are equally evident; the final union of the reincarnation belief, so mysterious in its origin, with the ambitious and pessimistic philosophy crystallized in the Upanishads, which fixes the only rest for the finite in its ultimate amalgamation with the infinite, is more difficult to comprehend, yet clear in so far as such conceptions may be clearly stated.

A STUDY OF AMERICAN COLLEGES

A great many people, for widely various reasons, will be able to find both instruction and entertainment in John Corbin's "Which College for the Boy?" (Houghton, Mifflin & Co., $1.50.) It is a contribution of practical value to the educational problem which must be solved by so many anxious parents and ambitious young people. Mr. Corbin takes six typical American institutions, each representative of a different tendency in educational progress. "Princeton, a collegiate university; Harvard, a Germanized university; Michigan, a Middle-Eastern university; Cornell, a technical university; Chicago, a university by enchantment; Wisconsin, a utilitarian university," and endeavors to show in each case "what sort of young men go to each college, what its traditions are, what the authorities aim to do, and what they are actually doing." He writes with a lively pen, and his keen sympathy has enabled him to transfer to his pages the varying flavor of undergraduate life in the several institutions. Other chapters discuss the agricultural college, the claims and advantages of the small college and the question of expense.

THE STORY OF THE NEZ PERCES.

Miss Kate C. McBeth, who has lived for twenty-seven years as a missionary in daily contact with the Indians of whom she writes, tells the story of their lives and customs, their conversion to Christianity, their conflicts with the whites in "The Nez Perces Indians since Lewis and Clark," (Fleming H. Revell Company, $1.50.) The tribe was friendly and helpful toward the two explorers, the first white men they had ever seen. Twenty-five years afterward, being deeply disturbed about religious matters, they sent four of their most trusted chiefs to follow the trail of the white men into the unknown regions beyond the mountains to see if they could get some book of which they had vaguely heard which would tell them who God is and what He wishes man to do. Miss McBeth thinks this pilgrimage, because of its consequences, the most important event in the history of the Nez Perces. She writes of the people among whom she has spent so many heroic years with loving sympathy, while her intimate knowledge of the customs and folklore will make her work of value to all students of the Indian race.

"ELLEN OR WHISPERINGS OF AN OLD PINE"
By JOSEPH BATTELL

Second Edition—Revised and Enlarged—Volume II.

THE sounds of the world are made by elastic bodies, and every such will make the sound it was made to make, and will make no others.

This principle covers the whole question of where sounds heard at the telephone are made. For the explanation given by scientists in textbooks, and elsewhere, that they are made by the diafram, or any other part, of the receiving instrument is impossible.

Many sounds are heard and untold millions may be heard at the telephone, any telephone. The diafram, any diafram, can make but one, which is hardly more than a scratch. All the rest of them must be made by the instruments, whether natural or artificial, made to make them.

In every case, as a matter of fact, we know where the sounds heard at a telephone are made. They are made at or near the sending instrument, the only exception being sounds introduced into the wire by so-called induction. There is no other explanation possible. It follows, wherever the distance is considerable, they are carried to their destination by the electric current. Again, there is no other explanation possible. And this is not only possible, but absolutely certain, as repeatedly proven in "Ellen."

It follows again that sound is infinitesimal particles of matter, the same as its kindred sensations, odor and light. It is also true, as first discovered by the great electrician, Oersted, and scientist Ritter, that sound is electrical; that is, it is in part composed of electricity, in which unquestionably consists its innate power to move. And it spreads in the atmosphere as easily as an electric display flashes through the heavens.

This further peculiarity belongs to sound, that when uttered in a homogeneous medium, as air, it spreads in all directions. Although if uttered in a tube or carried in a wire, it follows the course of the conductor.

The subject of sound in all its phases is most fully discussed in this volume of "Ellen," and the first correct explanation of its action in a graphophone, as well as a telephone, or the manner in which a graphophone record is made, is here given.

The book comprises 977 pages, including Part I., an entire new system of Geometry—in which every Proposition is demonstrated in new lines, far more intelligently than in the old system, and with less than half the words—and review of Trigonometry, 182 pages; and Part II., by far the most thorough consideration of sound that has ever been published, 707 pages.

Printed on superior paper, and illustrated with 78 very beautiful pictures of Vermont scenery. Cloth, $3. Morocco, full gilt, $4. Vol. I., $2 and $3. Express or postage paid.

COMMUNICATIONS TO THE EDITOR

Correspondents Express Their Views on Sunday Topics---Criticism, Appreciations, Corrections and Essays in Little.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

WILL you allow me to propound a question for the consideration of your readers? It is this: Are publishers or authors the more to blame for that deplorable English to be found in American books, and especially in American novels? Whoever reads a good many of these and does so with an eye appreciative for skill and taste in the use of the English language is bound to be surprised, disappointed, and discouraged. He is forced to ask himself how it happens that so large a proportion of American authors bungle their native tongue. In the whole army of them he will find scarcely a dozen who can write as well as every one of them ought to be able to write before aspiring to authorship at all. Lack of distinction of style, clumsy, rambling construction, carelessness in the use of words, errors of grammatical form are faults that he will find scattered broadcast through the pages of American books. In common with those who have criticised publicly this lamentable state of affairs I have heretofore supposed that it is due solely to the authors themselves, aided and abetted, perhaps, by the carelessness of the publishers' editorial critics. But a recent experience of my own has led me to think that perhaps the burden of blame should rest more upon the publishers than it does upon the much berated authors.

Wishing to make some final corrections in a manuscript which had been accepted by a certain large and prominent publishing house, it was returned to me for that purpose after it had been revised in their office. And these were some of the things which had been done to it: Adjectives and adverbs—of whose use it is ever my aim to be sparing—had been interpolated where they were not in the least needed; contiguous sentences, expressing separate ideas, had been thrown into single long and rambling constructions which seemed to smash up against a period merely by accident; my own forms of construction had been changed to others grammatically wrong, which also distorted my meaning; on almost every page my own choice of words had been so exchanged for others of slightly different meaning, color, or emphasis as to cheapen and vulgarize the style. The list is already long enough to illustrate my meaning, although it does not begin to exhaust the tale of my grievances. Every professional writer knows the subtle ways in which a manuscript can be polished up until its whole appearance is as much altered as that of a slovenly woman after she has been well groomed and gowned. Well, it was that sort of a process to which my manuscript had been subjected, but the "polishing" had been down instead of up. And the question I am now debating, in consequence, is, how many other authors have had their work subjected to just such treatment in the publisher's office and have then been criticised for their deplorable English? I have heard of one author whose manuscript was accepted by an old and famous publishing house and was then, unknown to her, submitted to a similar sort of "polishing," for which they sent her a bill for $60. This story was told to me by one of the most competent literary critics in New York, who had seen the manuscript in its original form and thought it so excellent as to need no revision.

The books sent out by still another prominent publishing firm use such a peculiar system of punctuation that I have often wondered why so many American novelists use commas instead of periods and rush through several sentences all in one breath. But I now understand, with apologies to the authors whom I have often so wrongly sneered at, that, probably, it is all due to some editorial critic who has not yet learned, notwithstanding his position, the basic principles of punctuation and sentence construction. The editorial critic of still another large publishing house once told me proudly that American literature owes more to the publishers' critics than it does to the authors. And I truly begin to think that to them it does owe most of its bad English!

The Soul of Spain.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In your review of Havelock Ellis's "Soul of Spain" occurs the following: "Better descriptions of the old Spanish cities—and descriptions less like those in guide books—than those in this 'Soul of Spain,' cannot, so far as the present commentator knows, be found anywhere."

Could your reviewer have overlooked Edmondo de Amicis's "Spain and the Spaniards"?

The Full Cup.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I don't usually indulge in comment, but the editorial on anaemic art is so much to the point, so much what is needed, that I can't refrain from thanking the writer.

Literature of recent years has come down to such a mushy, sentimental, kindergarten basis, destitute of either thought or truth, that as a matter of fact the people worth while are shunning modern work. The cause of this is too long to go into; but I don't see very much hope for the authors bound in Lilliputian bonds unless deliverers like this TIMES editorial strike with the hammer of Thor.

Anwyay, here's thanks! It does one's soul good to feel there are others thirsty for "the tingling vigor of the full cup."

"Allen Raine."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

In the article concerning "London Literary Gossip" of the April 25 number of the SATURDAY TIMES REVIEW Mr. Galbraith expresses a desire to know whether Allen Raine is familiar to the American people. He states also that he sees no reason for the popularity of her work since, he frankly adds, he has read one of her books and finds it "not sensational, and entirely proper."

Does Mr. Galbraith suggest that in order to be popular a novel must be either sensational or improper? Is that not a rather severe criticism of the English reading public? Allen Raine is to one American at least well known, that same American possessing the six books which Mr. Galbraith has not read, but not, however, the one he so severely criticises. This writer has done for Wales what Barrie has done for Scotland, and the reader will find in her stories much of the fine, tender quality of the Scotch writer. Allen Raine has also for Wales the same sort of affection which William Black had for the Outer Hebrides, and many of her descriptive passages show marked ability, but she has not that unusual Celtic insight and superb power of delineation which so characterizes Black's writings; still, after reading Allen Raine's stories one is left with much the same impression. One feels the strong, cool air of the moor—and hears the breaking of the sea against the rugged, precipitous rocks of the lonely Welsh shore. As one goes salmon fishing with Black, so with Allen Raine one wanders over the high Welsh hills, watching the sun as it sinks to rest, or, as it rises in golden radiance from the mist of morning. The lover of nature, who enjoys fiction which is "not sensational and entirely proper," will find the secret of Allen Raine's success not only in the quaint expressions of the Welsh tongue, or in the simple tale well told, but rather is the charm in the clear and accurate descriptions of Old Mother Nature, which bring those who see into a close and intimate relation with all the strength and beauty in earth, sky, and shore.

AN ADMIRER OF ALLEN RAINE.

"The Average Man."

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Anent your editorial on "The Average Man," let me quote a paragraph from a character sketch by Henry Beach Needham entitled "Theodore Roosevelt—An Outdoor Man," which appeared in the January, 1906, issue of McClure's Magazine:

"The President once answered in this wise a man who had expressed admiration for his successful career:

"'It has always seemed to me that in life there are two ways of achieving success, or for that matter, of achieving what is commonly called greatness. One is to do that which can only be done by the man of exceptional and extraordinary abilities. Of course, this means that only one man can do it, and it is a very rare kind of success or greatness. The other is to do that which many men could do, but which as a matter of fact none of them actually does. This is the ordinary kind of greatness. Nobody but one of the world's rare geniuses could have written the Gettysburg speech, or the Second Inaugural, or met as Lincoln met the awful crises of the civil war. But most of us can do the ordinary things, which, however, most of us do not do. Any hardy, healthy man, fond of outdoor life, but not in the least an athlete, could lead the life I have led if he chose—and by choosing I, of course, mean choosing to exercise the requisite industry, judgment, and foresight, none of a very marked type.'"

I cut this out two years ago and have kept it on my desk at hand ever since as a striking example of the possibilities of "The Average Man."

GOOD ADVICE FOR THE HOME-BUILDER.

Foundation principles are the chief concern of H. W. Desmond and H. W. Frohne in "Building a Home," (Baker & Taylor Company, New York,) a book brimming full of sensible, practical, and most wholesome advice for all who are planning the erection of their own roof-trees. The two authors, who are, respectively, the editor and associate editor of The Architectural Record, make evident in the book's pages that they are entitled, for three reasons, to speak with authority upon the subject: Their common sense, their appreciation of the essential union between esthetic value and practical purpose in architecture, and their thorough knowledge of the technical side of the subject. At the very bottom of all their foundation principles they try to impress upon the prospective home-builder that art in architecture is not something extraneous and expensive, but a result of perfect proportions, harmonious lines and masses and adaptability to purpose, and that it can be achieved in the modest cottages just as well as in an imposing mansion. The principle of adaptability to desired use they insist upon, from the choosing of the site to the planning of the kitchen. Over a hundred full-page illustrations and plans elucidate the text.

READ IT

"I picked up a copy of THE LAST EGYPTIAN in Chicago and read it on the train coming East. It is a new book, just out, and one of the best yarns I have read in many a year. It rings true, and that is the best thing which can be said about any book. It gets right down to business at the start, and every chapter bristles with exciting situations, intrigue, character study, love complications, fighting, treasure-hunting and all the other elements which go to make a readable story; but they are all brand new. Several of my friends read it, including Mrs. L. They all like it. The only fellow who didn't like it was the porter on the train. He couldn't get me to turn in. The Last Egyptian will be the 1908 big hit, or I'm mistaken. The author's name is withheld for some reason, but whoever he is he knows his Egypt."

A well-known Chicago business man sends us the foregoing extract from a letter which he received from a friend in New York. The man who wrote the letter is widely known throughout the United States. We are not permitted to give the names. The testimonial was unsolicited by us, but it describes the book to a dot.

R. J.'s Mother
By Margaret Deland

This volume has the true touch of this great author—and one critic exclaims, "We need more Mrs. Delands!" Her stories hold all the big things of life, the deep and simple elements which awake an answering heart beat in the common experience of us all. Mrs. Deland achieves some of her best work in this new volume. The pictures are notably good.

The Golden Rose
By Amelie Rives

Beauty of sentiment, beauty of scene, of character and literary style make this a most unusual novel. The story is unfolded at a delightful country estate in mid-summer, among shadowy lawns and odorous gardens, filled with tender memories. The author of "The Quick or the Dead" returns to the scenes of her first triumphs in this novel.

The Barrier
By Rex Beach

The one novel that every one is reading or will read this summer—in six cities it has been reported as the best selling novel for the past month. London also has ordered a fresh supply, and the Morning Leader says: "The events crowd one another in an absorbing manner. America produces fiction like this supremely well; here is a finished sample."

King Spruce
By Holman Day

Life means strife in the tempestuous woods of Maine when a young man matches his strength against that of the lumber barons—to win the daughter of their chief. This new novel is a sweeping, healthy story of a fight for love in the romantic realm where pine trees are king. A close claimant for dividing honors with "The Barrier."

The Golden Ladder
By Margaret Potter

Dedicated to the wives of American business men, this story is for their husbands too. It is for all—not a sermon—nor is there a moral tagged on at the end like an automobile number. But it is a story that means something.

The Servant in the House is a great book of a great play.

Astronomy With the Naked Eye, by Serviss, is just the book for this out-of-door weather. Entirely simple and non-technical.

NEWS OF BOSTON'S BOOK ACTIVITIES

New Oppenheim Novel Ready To-day—Harrison Rhodes's Gay Romance—Book on Immigration.

BOSTON, May 15.—No prophecies in English politics appear in Mr. Phillips Oppenheim's "The Avenger," which Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. will bring out to-morrow, and only one little Balkan, a very little Balkan, is at any moment visible in it. The interest centres in the avenger, and it would not be easy to create a character more startling than a person holding the theory that "human life is sacred or not, according to its achievements," and ready to take the life when the achievements show that it is mischievous. It is hardly a doctrine to be freely preached, but the author cannot be accused of preaching it, or of making its effects otherwise than disastrous for any one who practices it, and he puzzles the reader perfectly.

Mr. Harrison Rhodes's gay romance, "The Adventures of Charles Edward," also comes to-morrow, bringing its sheaf of eight copyrights with it, and also twenty-four pictures of ladies wearing clothes so highly generalized that they will be as fashionable as they now are when the sun grows cold and the stars are old. There is small doubt of the success of a book of which tempting fragments have already appeared in five magazines, and besides this is a fortunate season for novels, and stories of new editions abound.

Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. are publishing Miss Helen M. Winslow's "Spinster Farm," a pleasant tale of a real farm, but not the same as that celebrated by Miss Kate Sanborn. The author's love for animals betrays itself in a long array of pleasant anecdotes, not only of the "critters," but of the household pets necessary on a farm ruled by women. Mr. Theodore Roberts's "Captain Love" is also ready.

This house is also issuing "Race or Mongrel, American or Pan-European?" a book which is a general warning against unrestricted immigration. The author shows empire after empire weakened and shattered by the infusion of foreign blood, and instances the Jews as an example of a race preserved in strength by abstention from foreign marriage, and the gypsies as a proof that even a worthless type may be guarded from extinction if the purity of its blood be maintained. On the other hand, he thinks that free European immigration is needed in South America to correct the influence of the imported blacks and of the copper-colored natives. Good-bye to the dusky princess of romance if this sort of book shall continue! It is noteworthy that more than one author of Canadian experience has already discredited her in fiction. By and bye, instead of wondering why the cold-hearted John Smith did not marry Pocahontas, historians will commend his wisdom in sailing away.

Still another addition to the numerous recent books on why, how, and what we should eat is Goodwin Brown's "Scientific Nutrition Simplified," (Frederick K. Stokes Company, 75 cents.) The sub-title describes it as "a condensation for everybody of the theories and discoveries of Chittenden, Fletcher, and others." The author gives an account of the development, tests, and scientific recognition of Horace Fletcher's theories, devotes a chapter to the relation of food to the body and another to its food requirements, and discusses the scientific basis of Mr. Fletcher's contentions. Incidentally he tells how much he has benefited himself by following the principles laid down in the book. Mr. Brown, however, does not attempt to set forth any theories of his own. He merely discusses, with copious quotations, the doctrines of others, considering also the opposing arguments. Whoever is interested in the modern theories of nutrition will find here a plain, accurate statement of the ideas of the most advanced scientific thinkers upon how best to make food conserve the body's needs.

The Circulating Department of the New York Public Library gives the following as the most popular books of the week ended May 12: Adult Fiction—Burnett's "The Shuttle," Beach's "The Barrier," Crawford's "Prima Donna." Juvenile Fiction—Alcott's "Little Women," Barbour's "Crimson Sweater," Burnett's "Little Lord Fauntleroy." Non-Fiction—Ibsen's "Plays," Hill's "Fighting a Fire," Creasy's "Fifteen Decisive Battles."

The price of The New Dictionary of Americanisms by Sylva Clapin, published by Lewis Weiss & Co., is $4, and not $1, as a notice last week stated.

Paul Anthony, Christian

By HIRAM W. HAYES. 415 pages. $1.50 postpaid.

This brilliant novel has practically exhausted its first edition of six thousand copies, and is now reported as one of the steady sellers.

The interest in Christian healing so rapidly spreading throughout the world finds an answer in the clear statements of this skilfully woven story of adventure, romance and helpfulness.

"The fascination which the story exerts on the reader shows that the writer is far above the ordinary, and might be classed easily among the noted novel writers of the day. It is a simple story, too, and as the author says, 'is a book written with a purpose,' but the purpose is so deftly handled that it could not possibly offend the most sensitively religious person. The love element, of which youth and beauty is never tired of reading, runs through at least twenty of the twenty-four chapters. After reading the book, it would seem as though one would hardly fail to reach out towards the lofty ideals represented by the various characters."—The Daily Times, Bayonne, N. J.

Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large, and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

JERSEY.—Please give me what information you can regarding Salvator Rosa, the painter—his nationality, importance as a painter, &c. Also what price his works have brought at sale, and where the best examples of his work are to be found, here and abroad.

This is rather a large sized question to attempt to answer in our limited space. Salvator Rosa was born at Renella, near Naples, Italy, June 20, 1615. He was intended for the Church, but became an artist. In his eighteenth year he left Naples and joined a body of banditti who infested the Abruzzi. He returned home a short time before his father died. In 1634 he visited Rome, painting the portico and loggia of Cardinal Brancaccia's palace at Viterbo, and an altar piece for the Chiesa del Morte in the same place. He returned to Naples, where he painted his great picture, "Prometheus." In 1639 he cast aside his palette and came forth as a poet, singer, and actor in Rome. After a while he resumed his painting, and from 1639 to 1647 produced numbers of forest and sea scenes, &c. In the Naples revolution of 1647 he joined Masaniello, after whose death Rosa once more went back to Rome, where he painted "La Fortuna" and "L'Umana Fragilita." He next went to Florence, where he became a warm friend of Lorenzo Lippi, poet and painter, whom he assisted in his paintings. In 1652 he returned to Rome again. He painted "Jonah Preaching at Nineveh" for the King of Denmark, and a battle piece for the French King, which is now in the Louvre. In 1668 he, alone of living artists, was allowed to exhibit his pictures in Rome. These were his "Triumph of St. George" and "Saul and the Witch of Endor." His last work of importance was a "St. Turpin," finished in 1670. After that his faculties began to fail and he died in Rome March 15, 1673.

We have not room to name all of his paintings. Among the principal ones, besides those above named, are "Soldiers Gaming," in the Dulwich Gallery; "Two Studies of Men in Armor," in the Edinburgh National Gallery; "The Leucadian Leays" and a portrait of himself, in the Florence Gallery; "Temptation of St. Anthony," "Justice," "The Catiline Conspiracy," and "Fall of the Giants," in the Pitti collection; "Christ Clearing the Temple," in the Cataneo Palace in Genoa; "Forest Scene," in the London National Gallery; "A Holy Family," in Stafford House, London; "The Assumption," in the Chiesa della Vittoria Brera in Milan; "The Prodigal Son," in the Hermitage in Petersburg, and "St. John Preaching," in the Palace Colonna, Rome. His "Prometheus" is in the Corsini Palace in Rome.

Rosa was also a free and excellent etcher. The New York Historical Society has three of his paintings. He excelled in battle scenes, landscapes, marine views, and robbers' dens. His paintings seldom appear in the market. A good one is worth at least $10,000.

G. H. T.—Can you inform me of the author of the quotation "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad"? I find a Latin version, "Quos Deus vult perdere dementat," but I find no author given. I should be very glad to obtain information regarding the original author of the expression.

Dryden, in "The Hind and Panther," Part III., says:

"For those whom God to ruin has design'd,
He fits for fate, and first destroys their mind."

The old Latin saying is "Quos Deus vult perdere prius dementat." The original author is apparently unknown. It has been ascribed, erroneously, it is said, to Euripides, Publilius, or Publius. Syrus, a Latin writer of farces, who flourished in the first century before Christ, was the author of a series of moral sentences or maxims in iambic and trochaic verse. Each maxim is comprised in a single verse. These maxims have been translated by Darius Lyman. One of the maxims is: "Whom Fortune wishes to destroy she first makes mad."

There is in Euripides the following:

"Otan de daimon andri prosune kaka tonnoun eblapse proton."

That is: "When a divinity would work evil to a man, first he deprives him of his senses."

Joshua Barnes (1654-1712) quoted the saying from the Greek as follows: "Quem Jupiter vult perdere, prius dementat."

The English proverb runs: "Whom God will destroy He first of all drives mad."

George Herbert, in his "Outlandish Proverbs," has it: "Whom God will punish he will first take away the understanding."

A translation from Euripides, as quoted by Athenagoras, runs: "But the devil, when he purports any evil against man, first perverts his mind."

S. MORRISTOWN.—Can any one tell me where the story of the "Alamo" has been told by Sidney Lanier? Richard Harding Davis refers to it in "The West from a Car Window," and I have often wondered whether Lanier had told it in prose or verse and where it could be found.

It is in Sidney Lanier's "Retrospects and Prospects," published in 1899 by Charles Scribner's Sons at $1.50. It is the second of the five prose essays which the volume contains, and is entitled "San Antonio de Bexar." Lanier went to San Antonio in the hope that its climate would be of benefit to him as a consumptive. His story of "that bloodiest, smokiest, grimiest tragedy of this century," as he terms the fight of the Alamo, may be found on pp. 65-73. He quotes from the Texas Almanac for 1873 its story of the escape from the Alamo, on March 3, of a single man, Moses Rose, whose account of that day, as transmitted by the Zuber family, whose residence was the first place Rose had dared to stop at, "must entitle it," Lanier says, "to consecration as one of the most pathetic days of time."

M. H.—Can you tell me where Moore in his poems bewails the fact that everything he loved he lost, just as his love was returned? He speaks of a gazelle that died just as it seemed to grow fond of him. I heard it was to be found in "Lalla Rookh," but I have not been able to locate it.

You will find what you seek in Moore's "The Fire Worshippers." That portion of the poem to which you refer is as follows:

"Oh, ever thus, from childhood's hour,
I've seen my fondest hopes decay;
I never loved a tree or flower
But 'twas the first to fade away.
I never nurs'd a dear gazelle,
To glad me with its soft black eye,
But when it came to know me well
And love me, it was sure to die."

M. B. R.—Will you kindly tell me who wrote and where I can find the saying: "God helps those who help themselves"? I was told it is in the Bible, but I cannot find it there.

The words quoted are to be found in Algernon Sidney's "Discourse Concerning Government," (Chapter II., Section 23,) and are also to be found in the maxims prefixed to "Poor Richard's Almanac, 1757," and are therefore ascribed to Benjamin Franklin.

M. M.—Will you please tell me in your SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS if Thomas Nelson Page has written a book in the past year of the title "On Newfound River," or is it a new edition of a book he wrote about twelve years ago?

Thomas Nelson Page originally published "On Newfound River" in 1891, and a new and revised edition of the work was published in 1906.

Answers from Readers.

EDWARD HARDING.—In your issue of March 28, "S.," Morristown, informs a querist that the sonnet beginning:

"A tone of pride or petulance repressed—
A gust of irritation gently fought—"

was written by some Edward Harding, otherwise unknown. The poem in question is No. 2 of "Six Sanctuary Sonnets" contained in a booklet entitled "Sonnets and Other Verses," by Edward Harding, Westview, Cork, Ireland. As the little volume is out of print I give you the sonnet, which, perhaps, your correspondents may desire to see again.

STRIFE.

"A tone of pride or petulance repressed—
A gust of irritation gently fought—
A reconcilement generously sought—
A murmuring of discontent suppressed—
A peace in importunity possessed—
A shadow of annoyance set at naught—
A purpose put aside—a banished thought—
A word of self-explaining unexpressed:
Trifles they seem, these petty soul-restraints,
Yet he who proves them such must needs possess
A constancy and courage grand and bold.
They are the trifles that have made the saints!
Give me to practice them in humbleness,
And nobler power than mine doth no man hold."

L. B. LONGACRE.—Thomas Brennan will find an interesting and authoritative note on the airs Eileen Aroon and Robin Adair in "The Irish Melodies of Thomas Moore," restored and arranged for voice by C. V. Stanford, one of the best of contemporary musicians. Stanford has done for the National melodies of Ireland what Brahms did for those of Germany, Korbay for those of Hungary, and what others have done for the national melodies of other nations. The music is on Page 5, and is referred to in Note 3 of the appendix.

M. C. L.—The exact wording requested by "M. B.," May 2, is:

"Speak to Him, thou, for He hears, and Spirit with Spirit can meet; Closer is He than breathing, and nearer than hands and feet."

It is the sixth couplet of Tennyson's "The Higher Pantheism."

J. C. D. B.—In reply to J. D. Barron on May 2, I can inform him that Dr. John Williamson Palmer of Baltimore, Md., who died about a year ago, was the author of "The Golden Dragon, or Up and Down the Irrawaddy." The book was published in New York in 1853 and is probably out of print. A full sketch of Dr. Palmer will be found in Appleton's Cyclopaedia of American Biography, Vol. IV., Page 639.

M. G. C.—The poem asked for by John F. Zebley, May 2, is called "My Creed," and is by Mary Ashley Townsend. It is to be found in a very excellent collection of love poems compiled by Jessie F. O'Donnell and published by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

A copy of the poem will be mailed to John F. Zebley if he will send his address to THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS.

Appeals to Readers.

L. O. STEVENS.—Will some reader of THE TIMES kindly give the complete poem from which the following lines are taken:

"Work for some good,
Be it ever so slowly;
Cherish some flower,
Be it ever so lowly."

M. C. L.—Can any one place for me a poem where Life is compared, among other similes, to—

"A poor Indian's sleep
While his boat hastens to the monstrous steep
Of Montmorenci"?

It is so familiar, yet so elusive, as to be tantalizing.

N. S. S.—Sometime after the civil war a large painting was exhibited in Kansas City. Its title was something about "Order No. 11." I do not clearly recall just what it was. Can any of your readers give me any information about the picture or what "Order No. 11" was?

J. A. D.—Can any of your readers supply or tell me where I can get a copy of a negro sketch, entitled, I think, "The Mustering Out of the Jeemstown Guards"? It was published originally, I think, in a Charleston (S. C.) paper, and told of the luring of a Carolina "Island" company of negro soldiers to the city, where they were mustered out of service by strategy.

ANNOUNCEMENTS OF NEW YORK BOOKS

Novels by a Number of Well-Known Authors Are Among Forthcoming Publications.

A NEW novel by Mrs. Henry de la Pasture, author of "The Lonely Lady of Grosvenor Square," "Peter's Mother," &c., is published this week by E. P. Dutton & Co. The title of the new novel is "The Grey Knight." Its plot deals with the love affair of a middle-aged hero, Sir Harry Tudor Gwyn, owner of a large estate with a great Norman castle for a country seat. The characters and their surroundings belong to that country in fiction which Mrs. de la Pasture has aready made peculiarly her own. Another book, just published, is a reprint of a monograph on Lady Lettice, wife of the celebrated Lord Falkland, written by her chaplain in 1647, under the title "Lady Lettice, Viscountess Falkland," by John Duncon. A fourth edition of "From Libau to Tsushima," the late Eugene S. Politovsky's journal narrative of the voyage of Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet to the East, is announced.

The two volumes of "Life and Letters of Herbert Spencer," edited by his literary executor and intimate friend, Prof. David Duncan, are published to-day by D. Appleton & Co. The work, while covering the entire life of Herbert Spencer, duplicates but little of the material furnished in the "Autobiography," which ends twenty-one years before the philosopher's death. Another book published this week is Alfred Henry Lewis's "Wolfville Folks," a narrative containing characters that will be familiar to the readers of the same author's "Wolfville" and "Wolfville Days."

Among the books published this month by Longmans, Green & Co. are: "From Their Point of View," by M. Loane, author of "The Queen's Poor"; a revised and cheaper edition of "Practical Shipbuilding," by A. Campbell Holmes, member of the Institution of Naval Architects, &c.; "A Practical Guide to School, Cottage, and Allotment Gardening," by John Weathers, F. R. H. S., with sixty-six illustrations and examination questions on cottage gardening; "Machine Design, Construction, and Drawing," by Henry J. Spooner, C. E., &c.

Among the books which the McClure Company expected to bring out this season, and whose publication has now been delayed until the Fall, is a novel by Lancelot Lawton entitled "A Japanese Spy." The author has passed a great deal of his time in intimate association with the people in the interior of Japan, away from influences of the outside world, and his book aims to give a picture of Japanese life as well as a mere romance.

"Wanted: A Theology," is the title of a book by the Rev. Samuel T. Carter, which will be published during the latter part of this month by the Funk & Wagnalls Company. The work is an attack on scholastic theology and advocates a religion that is free from dogmatism and devoted to a love of God and humanity. Marshall P. Wilder's "Smiling Around the World" is published this week. Dr. Pearce Kintzing's "Long Life and How to Attain It" has been postponed until the end of the month.

Besides Harold Bindloss's "Delilah of the Snows," the Frederick A. Stokes Company publishes this week an anonymous novel dealing with New York society, entitled "The Half Smart Set." The illustrations for the latter are by Armand Both.

Next week Cassell & Co. will publish in one volume "Royal Academy Pictures and Sculpture, 1908," the work which has been issued in five parts, published at weekly intervals, and which gives the pictorial record of the Royal Academy for the past year.

Thomas Whittaker has just published in cheap and popular form a volume of "Short Sermons, Second Series," by the Rev. John N. Norton, D. D., arranged for the use of lay readers, for the second half of the Christian Year, Trinity to Advent.

Next Saturday R. F. Fenno & Co. will publish a novel by Cooke Don Carlos, entitled "A Bottle in the Smoke." This is a historical tale of monastic and quasi-regal life in England during the reigns of Henry II. and Richard I. The principal scenes of the story are laid in and around the Benedictine Monastery of Bradfield House at Bury St. Edmunds, in Suffolk.

The Macmillan Company publishes this week "A Mother's Year Book," by Marion Foster Washburne; "The Unicorn from the Stars," by William Butler Yeats; "Electricity: What Is It?" by Prof. W. Denham Verschoyle; "The Age of Revolution," by the Rev. William Holden Hutton, B. D., in the Church Universal Series; "The Gospel of Pain," by Thomas J. Hardy; a new edition of "What to See in England," by Gordon Home; "African Nature Notes," by F. C. Selous; "Montreux," painted by J. Hardwicke Lewis and described by Francis H. Gribble in the series of color books; "Early London," by the late Sir Walter Besant, in the series entitled "The Survey of London"; and the following new volumes in Macmillan's Pocket Classics Series: Bulwer Lytton's "The Last Days of Pompeii," Shakespeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream," Hughes's "Tom Brown's School Days," Whittier's "Snow Bound," Emerson's "Early Poems," Hawthorne's "Mosses from an Old Manse," and Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice."

The two following books are published this week by the John Lane Company: "The Creed of Buddha," by the author of "The Creed of Christ," in which the fundamental teachings of Christianity are found to be identical with the teachings of Buddhism, and "The Girl in Question," an American love-story dealing with diplomatic life and political intrigue, by L. C. Houk.

"The Shoulders of Atlas," by Mary E. Wilkins-Freeman, and "Sir Richard Escombe," by Max Pemberton, have been postponed until next month by Harper & Brothers. Another book which was scheduled for publication this month, but which will not appear until late in June, is "Quicksteps Through Scandinavia," a profusely illustrated book of travel through Norway and Sweden, written in the sketchy manner indicated by the title, by S. G. Bayne.

Maurice Hewlett's "The Spanish Jade" is published this week by Doubleday, Page & Co. This novel deals with the Spanish life and character of fifty years ago, although the author assures his readers that his descriptions hold good for the Spain of to-day, which he declares has remained unchanged during the past half century. The book is furnished with a number of colored illustrations portraying some of the typical bits of Spanish scenery. "The Romance of the Reaper," by Herbert N. Casson, author of "The Romance of Steel," "The Great Races of America," &c., is another book issued this week. It has been running serially in Everybody's Magazine.

The Oxford University Press will shortly publish an accurate reprint of Stow's "Survey of London," the first edition of which appeared more than 300 years ago. The forthcoming "Survey" has been edited, with a long introduction and notes, by C. L. Kingsford, who performed a similar service for the Oxford edition of "Chronicles of London." A map of London as it was 300 years ago has been specially prepared for this edition. A second volume of "English Factories in India," by William Foster, covering the period 1622-23, has just been published.

Three books are published to-day by G. P. Putnam's Sons, as follows: "Paul, the Mystic: A Study in Apostolic Experience," by James M. Campbell, D. D., author of "The Indwelling Christ," "After Pentecost—What?" &c.; "South America on the Eve of Emancipation," by Prof. Bernard Moses, a new edition of whose "The Establishment of Spanish Rule in America" was published last month, and Horatio W. Dresser's "The Philosophy of the Spirit." The last-named volume undertakes a systematic study of the higher nature of man in relation to the Divine Presence, and places emphasis upon what man knows instead of upon those matters which he regards from the standpoint of an agnostic. A supplementary essay on Hegel's "Logic" is included in the volume.

Two books published this week by the Outing Company are "Training the Bird Dog," an illustrated treatise on the development of the hunting dog, by C. B. Whitford, and "American Poultry Culture," by R. B. Sando. Another Spring publication is "My Auto Book," by Walter Pulitzer, author of "A Cynic's Meditations," "Cupid's Pack of Cards," &c. The present volume is arranged to serve as a record for automobile runs, aside from its literary features, and is made to fit easily into the pocket. It contains some thirty-six humorous drawings by Hy. S. Watson.

Among the books to be published next week by Charles Scribner's Sons are "The Stage Door," being stories of theatrical life both on and off the stage, by Charles Belmont Davis, and "The Girl and the Game," a series of stories dealing with college life, together with eight short essays called "Talks with a Kid Brother," by Jesse Lynch Williams.

The Fleming H. Revell Company publish this week "Day Unto Day: a Brief Prayer for Every Day," by George Matheson; "The Unfolding Life: a Study of Development with Reference to Religious Training," by Antoinette Abernethy Lamoreaux, and "The Call of the Waters," being a study of the frontier. The book is an addition to the Home Mission Series.

Following the publication of "The Golden Ladder," Margaret Potter (Mrs. John Donald Black of Chicago) has just sailed from New York for Italy, where she will pass the Summer. Mrs. Potter declares herself most interested in what she calls the "great American comedy," and will devote herself for a while to portraying phases of contemporary American life.

Robert W. Chambers'
Latest Book

The New York Globe says: "Nothing more sparkling and more witty could be asked for." The New York Sun thinks: "Mr. Chambers' stories come like a breath of fresh air." The Philadelphia Public Ledger calls it: "A delightful love story."

Some Ladies in Haste

is the title, and I guess it is a corker, for the Detroit News says: "Really, this is refreshing. Here is a novel with a new ideal A book amply worth reading." According to the New York World: "Mr. Chambers has written delightfully, as usual. There is nothing better than his book for Springtime reading." The Baltimore American finds it: "An exceedingly humorous story."

Lafcadio Hearn
By George M. Gould, M. D.
Price $1.50 net. By Mail $1.65.

No American knew Lafcadio Hearn so intimately as Dr. Gould. No writer has ever so successfully portrayed his character, his idiosyncrasies. Hearn, a Greek, first sent 'round the world the message of Japan's wistaria gardens, the quaintness of her people, the romance of her history.
